ABSTRACT

PALS (Partners in Active Learning Support) is a mentoring program that matches high school agriculture students with elementary students who have special needs. Developed by the National Future Farmers of America (FFA) Organization, the program is designed to help those involved build trust in others and develop positive self-esteem. This training kit consists of the following: (1) "Getting Started: An Introduction to PALS Handbook," designed to help users become familiar with PALS key components and to provide ideas on getting started (it also explains the history of the PALS program and how PALS fits into an FFA chapter); (2) "PALS Local Team Training Manual," a step-by-step guide to developing and implementing the PALS programs in the community, including handouts, transparencies, readings, a glossary, and a list of six additional resources; (3) "PALS Mentor Training Activities Booklet"--a set of activities focusing on developing mentoring, personal growth and development, problem solving, and communication skills, to be used for training the high school student volunteers (handouts, transparency masters, readings, and additional resources are included in this booklet).

Introduction to the PALS Training Kit

Welcome to the PALS complete training kit! This kit consists of the following elements:

1. Getting Started: An Introduction to PALS Handbook
 - This handbook will help you become familiar with PALS, its key components, and how to get started.
2. PALS Local Team Training Manual
 - You can use the Local Team Training Manual to introduce your local team to PALS and take them step-by-step through developing and implementing the PALS program in your community.
3. PALS Mentor Training Activities Booklet
 - These materials will come in handy when it's time to begin training your high school students. These activities focus on developing mentoring, personal growth and development, problem-solving and communications skills.
4. Video Tapes
 - The first tape contains two programs that can be used to introduce PALS to parents, community, school board members, faculty and staff, etc. The programs are:
 - PALS—An Introduction (Overview of PALS and its impact)
 - PALS—Questions & Answers (More specific issues addressed)
 - The second tape contains the program, Training Your PALS Team. It is the introduction to this training kit and explains in detail how to use all the materials in your local community.

By using all of these components, you can build a strong PALS program in your school.

GETTING STARTED: An Introduction to PALS

NOTE: The PALS Training Material Kit consists of the Getting Started Handbook, the Local Team Training Manual and the Mentor Training Activities Booklet. Additional copies of these materials may be purchased by calling the National FFA Organization at 703-780-5600 and requesting Item #PALSTK.

PREFACE

The National FFA Organization affirms its belief in the value of all human beings and seeks diversity in its membership, leadership and staff as an equal opportunity employer. These materials were prepared and published by the National FFA Organization in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Education as a service to state and local agricultural education agencies.

The FFA Mission

FFA makes a positive difference in the lives of students by developing their potential for premier leadership, personal growth and career success through agricultural education.

Prior to publication these materials were pilot-tested with teachers, students, and local PALS teams across the country. The National FFA Organization extends special thanks to those individuals who offered their thoughts, opinions and ideas for improving these materials.

Partners in Active Learning Support

I. An Introduction to PALS

PALS is a mentoring program that matches high school agriculture students with elementary youngsters who have special needs. Developed by the National FFA Organization, the program helps those involved to build trust in others and develop positive self-esteem, both of which are critically lacking in many of today's challenged young people.

Through this program, high school and elementary students alike explore their interests in plants, animals and the world around them. They get excited about school and through these special one-to-one relationships, they develop stronger social skills.

PALS was designed to meet the changing needs of our society. One of the biggest changes of the last decade is in the American family structure. The "Norman Rockwell" family—a working father, housewife mother and two children—comprised only six percent of all family units during the last decade and this number continues to decrease.

Contrast this trend with the fastest growing group in our country, the prison population. America's prison population grew 139 percent from 1980 to 1990. Of those in prison, 82 percent are high school dropouts. The best way to reduce crime rates is not to build more jails, but to keep kids in school and give them a positive, productive alternative such as PALS.

"I notice that the kids' attitude towards life changes. The self-esteem of the children, it just raises it so high that they feel successful, they feel they can achieve academically and socially. They are going to remember this for the rest of their lives."

Sandy West, elementary counselor

Here are a few other notable changes from the 1990 Census:

- 82 percent of all children under age 18 now have working mothers and six out of ten mothers of pre-school age children work outside the home at least part-time.
- Women who are single parents are raising 13.7 million children with a median family income of $10,982 (as of 1989). Forecasters predict that 60 percent of today's children will live with a single parent at sometime before they reach age 18.
- In 1990, 13 percent of all children were regularly hungry, 25 percent were born to unmarried parents, and over 20 percent of all children under age 18 were below the poverty line.

These demographic shifts have strong implications for our schools and social service agencies. We know children from fractured homes face greater challenges in education. Often their social skills are underdeveloped and they have a low self-esteem which leads them further out of the mainstream and closer to failure.

Consider this statement from the 1989 National Report Card which summarizes the effects of the statistics above:

"While most young people are preparing to lead productive and responsible lives, it is estimated that one in four adolescents—about seven million young people—are seriously at-risk of not making a successful transition from youth to adulthood. Another seven million may be at a moderate risk. For these young people, the inter-related problems of functional illiteracy, juvenile crime, school dropouts, substance abuse, teenage pregnancy and youth unemployment threaten to foreclose their futures. For our society, the cost of these problems in human and financial terms are unaffordable and unacceptable."

The PALS program addresses these challenges in an effort to help students get "back on track" so they can make the most of their school years. PALS supports these young people while helping them become successful learners and resilient, productive citizens. The PALS structured mentoring program can break the cycle of low self-esteem, school dropouts, joblessness, family dysfunction, poverty and crime.

Because of its long-standing reputation of parental involvement, commitment to community, leadership development and goal setting for youth, FFA is uniquely qualified to carry out the PALS mission. FFA's "learning by doing" approach challenges individual and group values and norms while enhancing self-concept, competence and awareness. Whether the goal is to build self-esteem, apply agriscience theory, or volunteer to work on a community project, "learning by doing" is a successful way to teach and learn for any age.

FFA has for many years been involved with community development through its National Chapter Award Program (formerly known as the Building Our American Communities and Chapter Safety programs). PALS enhances and builds upon community activities while addressing the challenge issued by our national leaders for service programs through the National and Community Service Trust Act. The PALS program helps young people help themselves while strengthening the very fabric of the communities in which they live.

Through PALS, FFA is developing a new branch of human resource development. Accepting this responsibility and making a commitment to assist other human beings in realizing their potential is key to family interaction and community development. As such, FFA is redefining its role as a community citizen and leader. In order for the mentoring program to be effective, however, it must reflect the changing pluralistic society in which we live.

II. PALS Objectives

PALS is a direct outgrowth of the Strategic Plan for Agricultural Education, the mission of which is to provide a total, dynamic educational system that contributes to personal, academic and career development. PALS addresses this mission as well as the following agricultural education goals:

- updating instruction in agriculture and expanding programs about agriculture (Goal 1);
- amplifying the "whole person" concept of education, including leadership, personal and interpersonal skills (Goal 3); and
- providing leadership and cultivating strong partnerships in the total educational system (Goal 6).

To meet these goals, the following objectives have been identified for the PALS program:

1. Improve interpersonal, human relations and leadership skills (in both mentors and mentees) through a long-term mentoring relationship between elementary (second through fourth grades) youth and FFA members (ninth through twelfth grades).
2. Develop the human resource potential of FFA members, elementary youth, teachers, administrators and others involved in the program.
3. Increase human development through improved self-concept and self-esteem (in both mentors and mentees) as a result of relationships between young adult role models and elementary youth.
4. Increase the mentors' understanding of the human development process.
5. Increase consideration of human development needs of youth and the community at large with increased interaction and relationships between teachers across grade levels and school sites.
6. Develop networks between people of all ages who have similar goals, objectives and skills in human development.
7. Recognize and become familiar with programs and resources of local, state and federal agencies and institutions involved in youth development.

III. History of the PALs Program

The PALs program originated in 1991 as Project PALs. The first two pilot states were Arkansas and Michigan. Each of these states selected 10 FFA chapters for participation. Each chapter, in turn, assembled a seven-member team to manage the local program. The local teams received intensive mentoring and self-management training designed to guide them in developing program implementation plans for their individual sites.

In the fall of 1991, agriculture students were selected to serve as mentors. These students attended special "Made For Excellence" leadership training programs emphasizing personal growth and development. Throughout the year, the mentors received additional training and guidance from their local team on a regular basis.

In year two, Arkansas and Michigan added sites and Texas brought in 10 sites. During its third year, PALs expanded to include the following states:

- Arizona
- Illinois
- Kentucky
- Missouri
- North Dakota
- South Carolina
- Wisconsin
- Iowa
- Kansas
- Minnesota
- Montana
- New York
- Washington

In 1994, the program's developmental cycle was completed and PALs became available nationwide. To accommodate training needs, a solid set of training materials for the adult team and the mentors has been created. Those materials have been compiled in the PALS Training Kit of which this handbook is a part.

The materials are designed so that each local community can build the type of program they require in order to meet local needs. In addition, PALS is meant to serve as a community volunteer effort and provide the framework for communities to help themselves without outside aid. As such, local schools do not receive financial remuneration for participating in the program.

IV. Who Should be a Part of PALS?

Each PALS community assembles a seven-member local team that will manage the program. The PALS Training Materials will provide the necessary information to teachers so that they can implement the program locally. Each team should be comprised of:

- an elementary and a secondary administrator,
- an elementary and a secondary counselor,
- an agriculture teacher, and
- a person familiar with community resources who will serve as a coordinator.

The local team will be responsible for the following:

- Providing mentorship training to as many FFA volunteers as the program will allow during the first six weeks of the fall semester.
- Establishing a mentor advisory team that consists of a cross-section of community representatives. This advisory team will assist in seeking possible funding sources for sustaining the mentoring program in their community.

"We bring up the school a lot in our chamber because it's a small town and this is a business to us. We feel we should be involved in it. This was something that could bring the school and the community together."

Betty Sapp, Chamber of Commerce
President and PALS coordinator

p. 7

These potential sources include, but are not limited to, the following:

- civic organizations
- police departments
- school personnel
- parents
- social service/human resource agencies
- FFA Alumni
- National Young Farmer Educational Association, etc.

Many of the students who will benefit from this program may be identified as coming from a “high risk” environment. Priority for admission should be given to those students who have multiple factors that contribute to a “high risk” assessment.

V. Becoming a Part of PALs

Since you’re reading this handbook, you’ve taken the first step toward bringing this exciting program into your community. Once you’ve decided to implement PALs, you’ll need to assemble your local team. In fact, you may want to call a meeting of all or at least most of the key players and get their buy-in on bringing PALs into your school and community. You may want to show the video entitled, PALs—An Introduction, and/or PALs—Questions and Answers, to introduce everyone to the program and build excitement. This step will increase their level of enthusiasm and dedication to the program.

Once the local team has been assembled, you can use the PALs Training Kit* to thoroughly prepare the team for its responsibilities. Review the Local Team Training Manual and watch the video

 If you do not have the complete kit which consists of this handbook, a Local Team Training Manual, Mentor Training Activities Booklet and two videotapes, it can be ordered from the National FFA Organization by calling 703-780-5600 and asking for item #PALSTK.*

Training Your PALS Team, then determine the best time and place in which to implement the training. You may want to join with FFA chapters/schools in your state and conduct a larger training session. While it may be a bit more difficult to organize, you will be rewarded with a variety of viewpoints and additional expertise. In fact, you may be able to receive assistance from the National FFA staff. Call your state FFA staff person or the National FFA Organization at 703-360-3600 and ask for the Teacher Services Team.

It will take approximately one full day to conduct the local team training session. During the training session, each local team will develop:

- a strong understanding and appreciation for the value of mentoring;
- a mission statement for their program;
- an increased awareness of cultural diversity issues which could affect their program;
- strategies for recruiting and selecting mentors and mentees;
- their program action plan;
- strategies for promoting and marketing their program; and
- a plan to recognize program participants.

When the local team training has been completed, you'll be ready to implement the program in your community. The implementation plan should follow this general format:

- solicit volunteer support for the advisory team
- provide training for mentors
- match mentor-mentee pairs

- monitor mentoring process throughout the year
- provide a year-end evaluation

This plan will insure that the agriculture and elementary teachers and other team members will have assistance to recruit, screen, train and supervise the high school students.

VI. How PALS Fits into the FFA Chapter

Through PALS, FFA members are teaching and promoting agricultural literacy to students and teachers at the elementary level. This is creating a climate of greater understanding and acceptance for agricultural education within the overall education community. It is also developing the potential for a more diverse membership and a greater understanding and acceptance of diversity in the agricultural education community. PALS is developing future leaders with a true understanding of interpersonal communications and a realization of just how far a helping hand can go.

Since the PALS program began, teachers, counselors and principals have been amazed at its power. Individual sites have lauded the program for:

- bringing their community, including parents, back into the school;
- teaching kids the importance of helping others; and
- positioning the FFA as an important component of the educational program with administrators, counselors and teachers.

PALS is developing partnerships with many different groups of people within the communities. These include:

- counselors,
- administrators,
- civic and community organizations,
- churches, etc.

Many communities feel that PALS is helping them redevelop their communities while putting more emphasis on the future through the children.

PALS is quickly establishing itself within the FFA organization. It reaches many young people who are often excluded from other FFA activities and it has the potential to grow a new kind of crop: KIDS!

As it is mainstreamed into the organization, PALS is becoming an integral part of the award and recognition programs within FFA. PALS activities are being incorporated into the revised National Chapter Award Program. Chapters will complete one recognition form covering these three major areas:

- member development
- chapter development
- community development

By implementing PALS, FFA chapters can reach many of their goals in other areas. For instance, when a chapter is implementing PALS, it is involved in community development and thus, in the National

"PALS is opening doors to education. I have people who don't have agriculture programs asking, 'How, when can we get involved in PALS?' They want this program because they see the results."

Marion Fletcher, Agricultural Education Supervisor, State Department of Education

"The best crop we grow in our county is our kids. When they go through experiences like this, after they graduate they're going to be more productive citizens."

Charles Franklin, agriculture teacher

p. 11

Chapter Award Program. Similarly, PALS activities help:

- build leadership and personal development skills in the mentors;
- in chapter development by providing a team structure within which to work;
- increase scholarship among members;
- keep students in school;
- increase the number of potential long-term members;
- increase the agricultural literacy of elementary students; and
- recruit new members.

In addition to meeting chapter goals, PALS participation can give your students an edge when competing for scholarships. In response to the national focus on community service, many scholarship applications include volunteer activities in their selection criteria. The PALS program provides a solid mechanism for community service.

Once a chapter has initiated PALS and starts looking at ways the program can help meet chapter objectives, the list grows quickly. Rather than becoming another program to add to an already burgeoning stack, PALS can help chapters consolidate programs and work more effectively to meet their goals.

For more information on incorporating PALS into your chapter, refer to the new edition of the National FFA Contests Manual (to be released January 1995).

p. 12

"I've taught 24 years and I was getting in a rut. Then this program came along. The kids got excited about it, membership is up, the community got excited about it. . . it just revitalized me and I think it's revitalized our chapter."

Curt DuVall, agriculture teacher

PALS

Partners in Active Learning Support

The National FFA Mentoring Program

Our Vision Statement

The country is in a state of change. Our institutions are restructuring to meet the needs of the twenty-first century. Through these processes, a growing awareness has developed regarding the need for connectedness between schools and communities. Specific conditions have been identified and articulated as causing our nation to be high-risk. These conditions continue to be a focus for our communities. Local schools and school districts struggle with the needs of children in high-risk environments and the lack of resources available to meet their needs.

The children must be supported and challenged to grow into successful, resilient, productive citizens who are lifetime learners. The strongest identifiable factor to support this dynamic resiliency is personal attention and support from a caring individual. PALS is a program that encourages the development of caring relationships. Positive role models support high school mentors as they build positive interpersonal relationships with elementary mentees in a school-based experience.

PALS is a structured mentoring program that builds the resiliency of our youth. It is an intervention that can break the cycle of low self-esteem, school drop-outs, joblessness, family dysfunction, poverty and crime. The time is right to link high school-aged youth with elementary-aged students from high-risk environments.

Our Mission Statement

The PALS mission is to create positive relationships between high school agriculture students and high-risk elementary students which results in increased self-esteem and better academic performance for both individuals. As trainers, it is our mission to enthusiastically share our PALS experiences, thereby motivating committed local teams to develop and effectively implement PALS programs in their communities.

Our Guiding Principles

1. Team Oriented
2. Committed to Diversity
3. Possess Unlimited Capacity for Growth
4. Honesty
5. Two-Way Open Communication
6. Promote the Sharing of Ideas
7. Encourage Risk-Taking
8. Dedicated to Empowering Kids

OVERVIEW

PALS is a mentoring program which matches high school agriculture students with elementary students to help them get excited about school, explore their interests in plants and animals, and develop their personal skills. Mentoring activities will center around building trust and developing positive self-esteem through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship at least once a week. The mentoring role is a major commitment on the part of the high school students. The mentors are selected to help build the human resource potential of a young child as well as that of themselves. The mentors will receive training from high school and elementary counselors and agriculture teachers when they are not working with elementary students.

TRAINING OBJECTIVES

The participants will:

1. Get to know each other and understand the PALS program concept and criteria.
2. Comprehend the benefits and roles of mentoring.
3. Develop a PALS mission statement for their local programs.
4. Increase awareness of cultural diversity issues which could affect their programs.
5. Develop strategies for recruiting and selecting mentors and mentees.
6. Develop their PALS program's local action plan.
7. Develop strategies for promoting and marketing their local PALS programs.
8. Learn how to recognize those who participate in the local PALS programs.

Activity 1.4

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Review the PALS training mission with participants.

Time: 5 minutes

Materials: Transparency #3, page 127
Transparency #4, page 128

Group Size: Whole Group

Activity: Show TP #3, discuss the training mission of PALS and respond to any questions participants may have regarding the program. Then, show TP #4 and discuss how sometimes a task seems almost impossible, but when you make up your mind to do something, it can be done, especially when it's something worthwhile. Ask the participants for examples.

Outcome: Comprehend that the PALS program has a high potential for reaching young people.

Group Size: Whole Group

Activity: Show TP #5 and distribute HO #3, then discuss the Plan-in-Hand Checklist which outlines the total workshop by section. To clarify the training program and expectations, ask participants if they have questions.

Show TP #6 and discuss how being a part of the PALS program can seem very stressful, particularly at first when you're feeling overwhelmed. Reinforce that when the whole picture comes into focus, it won't seem so overwhelming and the results are well worth the perseverance needed.

Outcome: Comprehend the total PALS training program and expectations.

Activity:

Each group will take a page from the flip chart, discuss within their group, and write what they feel their roles and responsibilities are as counselors, teachers, administrators, coordinators, etc., in PALS on the flip chart paper. Have the participants think of the following questions as they do this activity:

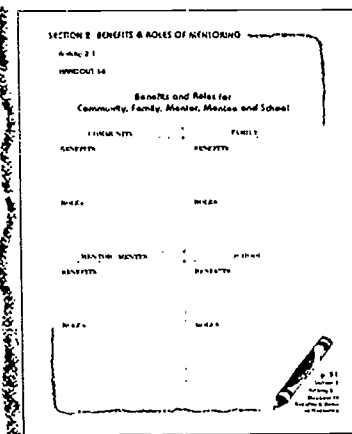

- How do you think PALS will benefit your group?
- How can it help you?
- What can you do in your role to help PALS?

Have participants list their findings, post on the wall and report. After they discuss their findings with the whole group, give them HO #6, have them discuss, then write and share their ideas with the whole group. This can be used later to work on the local action plans.

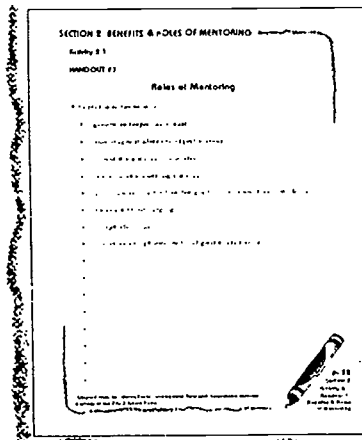

Show TP #11 and distribute HO #7. Discuss the mentor's role and list additional roles.

Outcome: Comprehend what benefits and roles of mentoring are for whole team.

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Note: Do these activities only if time permits. The instructor may decide to do one or both of the following activities.

Purpose: Begin building trust within teams

Time: 20 minutes

Materials: 8.5" x 11" sheets of paper
Masking Tape

Group

Size: Small Group (grouped by school teams)

Activity: The following activities will focus on building trust within the teams.

Building a Tower

Each person will listen to the following instructions:

- Divide into your school groups.
- Each group should have a supply of 8 1/2" x 11" sheets of paper and masking tape. (Use your judgment on how much paper to give each group. All groups must have the same amount of paper.)
- Instruct groups to build a tower with the materials they have.
- Let groups work on tower about 8 minutes. Stop the action as soon as one group seems to have a complete project or maybe even before anyone finishes. There will probably be considerable differences in size and success of the towers.
- Let each group show off their tower, then analyze what happened in the activity. Ask some of the following kinds of questions:

SECTION 2: BENEFITS & ROLES OF MENTORING

1. How do you feel about your tower? Is everyone in agreement with it?
2. Did anyone assume the role of leader in the task?
3. Was there competition for leadership?
4. Was there some kind of plan for how the tower would be built or did each person start out on their own?
5. Was the entire group in agreement as to how the tower should be built?
6. Did you have a division of labor or any specialization?
7. What kind of communication pattern did you have?
8. Did everyone get into the act or did some withdraw from the task?
9. Was your group influenced by what other groups were doing?
10. Did you feel pressure to get your tower built first or higher than anyone else?
11. How does this activity apply to PALS?

After discussion, you can vote on the best tower if time allows.

Living Chair

Give the following instructions to form a Living Chair:

- Stand in a circle close together front to back with shoulders touching.
- All at the same time, sit down on the person's lap behind you.
- You have now created a living chair.
- Try it a few times and discuss what happened and why it worked or didn't work.

Outcome: Begin developing team-building skills.

Activity 2.3

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Understand importance of support and guidance within teams.

Time: 5 minutes

Materials: Transparency #12, page 136

Group

Size: Whole Group

Activity: Show TP #12, and discuss how important support and guidance are for young people. As everyone has worked together during these activities, we must also work together as a team to make PALS a success.

Outcome: Comprehend what a difference support and guidance can make in one's life.

SECTION 3: VISION OF A MISSION

Objective:

Participants will develop a PALS mission statement for their program.

- 3.1 Introduction to a Mission
- 3.2 Acknowledging Difference in Perceptions and Opinions
- 3.3 Your Vision of the Mission

Total Time: 60 minutes

Materials Needed:

- Whole Group for TP #14 & #16
- Individually for part 1 of TP #15 and HO #9
- Pairs for HO #9
- School teams for part 2 of TP #15, #17, HO #10

Activity: Distribute HO #8 and tell participants they are going to complete a quick attitude adjustment rating scale. Have them rate the statements by circling a 10 for the best attitude and a 1 for the worst. Then, have the group discuss their findings.

Show TP #14, and discuss the importance of understanding how attitudes affect our personality, perceptions and how we make decisions. Explain that this is why it is important to work together as a team. Ask them to describe their attitude in one word and share it with the whole group.

Show TP #15, and tell the participants to think about key words or phrases which will guide them in building their mission statement. These might include examples from their benefits and roles of mentoring activities. The participants will use Post-it™ notes and answer the questions individually, writing only one answer per Post-it™ note, but using as many notes as they want. Instruct them to put the Post-it™ notes in the middle of the table for use later when they begin building their mission statements.

After they have completed answering the statements, they will meet with a partner and come to a mutual agreement on all answers. Then, they will meet with everyone at their table and must also come to a mutual agreement on all answers.

At the end of the activity, point out that all people have different perceptions and have a background of different experiences. Compromise is sometimes a must and communication is very important when working together toward a common goal.

Show TP #16, and make the following statement:

"You have a different opinion than those around you, but when you recognize the differences you'll see some similarities as well. NOW, the ball is in your court, what are you going to do about it?"

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of having different opinions, accepting some and compromising on others in order to work together toward a common goal.

- 5.1 Qualities for Recruiting Mentors/Mentees
- 5.2 Selecting Mentors/Mentees
- 5.3 Matching Mentors/Mentees
- 5.4 Parental Consent Forms for Recruiting
- 5.5 PALS Recruitment Video

Total Time: 90 minutes

Materials Needed:

- Handouts 14 – 24
- Transparencies 20 – 21
- Post-It™ Notes
- Videotape, PALS—An Introduction, and PALS—Questions & Answers
- PALS brochures (25 for each school)
- VCR and monitor

SECTION 5: RECRUITING & SELECTING MENTORS & MENTEEES

Group Size: School Team and Whole Group

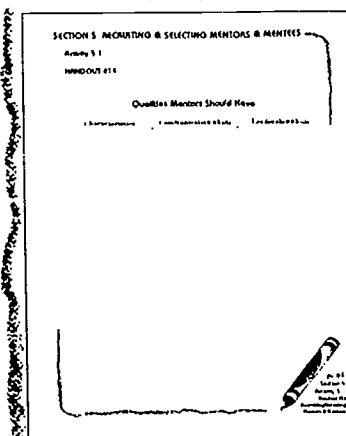

Activity: Show TP #20 and tell participants that sometimes it might seem as if no one wants to volunteer and you must make some tough choices. However, it will all work out in the end. Often we are looking for certain characteristics in the people we would like to see volunteer, in this case, mentors.

Ask each team to list characteristics or qualities they feel best describe a mentor. Each person will write down one quality or characteristic per Post-It™ note and then prioritize them. While they are completing this activity, distribute HO #14. After they prioritize their list of qualities, they will report to the whole group. Then, have them write their lists of qualities/characteristics on HO #14. This will be used later when developing their action plan.

Share with them some qualities you have found to be excellent for mentors to possess. Show TP #21 and discuss the following points.

Mentors could possess:

- qualities such as patience, honesty, acceptance and trust.
- communication skills such as listening, empathy, warmth and confirming behaviors.
- leadership skills such as decision-making, problem-solving, and goal-setting.

Distribute HO #15 and copies of the PALS Mentor Training Activities Booklet. Review how mentoring characteristics/qualities can be developed.

When being considered for mentoring, students will probably not come with all the needed qualities. However, those qualities can be developed through exercises such as those found in the PALS Mentor Training Activities Booklet.

Outcome: Understand the importance of selecting mentors based on selected mentoring qualities.

Activity: Distribute HO #'s 16-18, and discuss the importance of determining the criteria and method with which to select mentors and mentees. Let participants know these are just sample applications. They may choose to use the samples provided or create their own. They may also want to include personal interviews. HO #'s 16a-d and 17a-b, are applications for mentors; while #'s 18a-b are for mentees. Let participants know they will have an opportunity to use these in their action plan and timeline.

Outcome: Understand the importance of selecting mentors based on applications and/or interviews.

Note: Handouts aren't shown here. Refer to Appendix A: Handouts, pages 63-70.

Activity: Distribute HO #19, read and discuss before making decisions on how to select mentors and match mentees. Distribute HO #20 and discuss the importance of matching the mentors and mentees appropriately. Let participants know these are just some questions to be considered when making matches. Have them discuss and respond to the questions listed in their school groups, taking into consideration the points made at the bottom of the handout. When they complete the task, let one team member from each team write two responses to each question on the sheets of flip chart paper posted on the walls. Each team will then report their responses and discuss with the entire group.

Now distribute HO #21, and talk about actions one may take if a match is not working. Instruct each school team to discuss what they might do to assist mentors and mentees to mend a relationship, and who from the team will accept this responsibility. Will it be the counselor, teacher, administrator or coordinator, or a combination of people?

Distribute HO #22 and discuss how to bring closure to the relationship at the end of the school year. Ending on a high note will leave the students in a more positive frame of mind. After the whole group has discussed the ideas listed, have them come up with a few more of their own in their school group and then share those answers with the whole group.

Note: All of these responses will be used during the action planning.

Outcome: Understand the strategies of matching mentors/mentees.

SECTION 5. NEGOTIATING & SELECTING MENTORS & MENTEEES

Activity 5.3

WINDUP #1

What Steps Should be Taken if a Match is Not Working?

If the relationship between the mentor and mentee is not working, the team may not want to continue the activity. The mentor and mentee may want to discuss the problem with the facilitator. The facilitator may want to help the mentor and mentee to resolve the problem. The facilitator may want to help the mentor and mentee to find a new mentor or mentee. The facilitator may want to help the mentor and mentee to end the relationship.

1. Talk with the mentor and mentee separately.
2. Having the mentor and mentee together to discuss the relationship.
3. Encourage the mentee to go to the mentor and try to find some possible solutions.
4. Encourage the mentor to go to the mentee and try to find some possible solutions.
5. If the relationship is not working for enough time, the pair can be split up and be assigned a new mentor and a new mentee.
6. Have the mentor to reassess the problem and find what he/she has learned about mentoring a mentee and how he/she can improve.

What are some other steps that can be taken to help a mentor and mentee to work better?

What is it responsible for the part of the 5.3.3 program.

SECTION 5: RECRUITING & SELECTING MENTORS & MENTEEES

Activity 5.5

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Comprehend what PALS is all about.

Time: 15 minutes

Materials: Videotape: PALS—An Introduction
PALS—Questions & Answers
VCR and Monitor
PALS Brochures (25 per school)

Group

Size: School Team and Whole Group

Activity: Distribute the brochures. Now that the participants have most of the pieces to the puzzle, tell them to relax and preview a videotape on PALS. The tape will show them what the program is all about and reinforce why they are here. After they review the video, let them know they will be able to use this video along with the brochures to promote PALS in their communities.

Outcome: Understand the importance of PALS.

SECTION 6: DEVELOPING THE LOCAL ACTION PLAN

Objective:

Participants will develop their local PALS program action plan.

- 6.1 Envisioning Your PALS Program
- 6.2 Issues, Strengths and Challenges
- 6.3 Family Involvement
- 6.4 Making a Difference
- 6.5 Community Support and Fundraising
- 6.6 Team Tasks
- 6.7 Student Manual Outline
- 6.8 Training Strategies

Total Time: 120 minutes

Materials Needed:

- Handouts 25 – 34
- Transparencies 22 – 28
- Readings 1a-e
- Flip Chart Paper
- Markers
- Masking Tape
- Post-It™ Notes
- Construction Paper
- Colored Adhesive Dots
- Glue Sticks
- Scissors

SECTION 6: DEVELOPING THE LOCAL ACTION PLAN

Activity 6.1

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Have participants envision their local PALS program.

Materials: Handout #25, page 77
Flip Chart Paper
Markers
Masking Tape
Construction Paper
Colored Adhesive Dots
Post-it™ Notes
Glue Sticks
Scissors

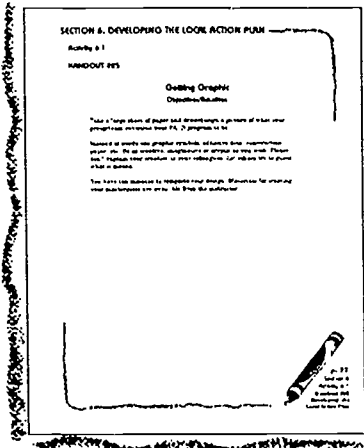

Group Size: School Teams
Whole Group

Activity: Distribute HO #25 (give only ONE copy per team). Instruct the participants to draw or design a picture of what they envision their PALS program to look like. Follow instructions on HO #25. The materials are available for the participants use in creating their vision. Allow about 10 minutes for this activity.

When time is up, have each group present their vision. Rather than defining what it is, instruct the whole group to guess.

Outcome: Through this activity, the participants will begin to develop a vision for their PALS programs.

Activity 6.2

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Assess the issues, strengths and challenges of each PALS school and community.

Time: 20 minutes

Materials: Handout #26, page 78

Group

Size: School Team and Whole Group

Activity: Distribute HO #26 and discuss the importance of understanding the community and how PALS can make a difference, not just at school, but within the whole community.

Have participants list:

- the issues within their community that need to be addressed,
- the strengths their team brings to the community,
- what the community has to offer, and
- challenges within the community/school their program will have to overcome or work through to be effective.

Considering all of these characteristics, what must each local team do to make PALS work? Have each local team share their ideas with the whole group.

Outcome: Recognize the challenges that exist and develop a plan to meet them.

Group Size: School Teams and Whole Group

Activity: Distribute HO #28 and discuss why community support is important. As you go through the discussion, have the participants respond to each of the five questions on the handout. Give them a few minutes to list the key agencies and individuals in their communities they can tap for resources.

Distribute HO #29 and discuss fundraising. Have the participants answer the three questions on the handout. Note: It is very important that they clearly state the types of resources they are requesting. As they market the program, it is always helpful to take marketing tools such as brochures, newsletters, articles, etc. Ask them why they want or need these items.

Give each team a flip chart page and markers. Have them create a list of their community resources including money, time and talent. When complete, each team will post their list on the wall. They should not assign tasks, only list resources.

Outcome: Understand community support and resources can make a difference in the program after it is clearly understood why the support or resource is needed.

After brainstorming, distribute HO #30. Have the participants list those items they feel are useful to their program under tasks. Before they fill out the other two columns, distribute HO #31 and have them answer the questions on how to involve others. Then return to HO #30 and list any other tasks they might think are important from their responses. Have them complete HO #30 by assigning tasks and dates to team members or others such as parents, students, community agencies, etc.

After they have completed each of the activities, have one person from each group share two or three tasks and responsibilities with the whole group. Ask the participants to not repeat something that has already been stated.

HANDOUT #2

PALS Overview

PALS is a mentoring program which matches high school agriculture students with elementary students to help them get excited about school, explore their interests in plants and animals, and develop their personal skills. Mentoring activities will center around building trust and developing positive self-esteem through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship at least once a week. The mentoring role is a major commitment on the part of the high school students. These mentors are selected to help build the human resource potential of a young child as well as that of themselves. The mentors will receive training from high school and elementary counselors and agriculture teachers when they are not working with elementary students.

A score of 90 or over is a signal that your attitude is “in tune” and no adjustments seem necessary; a score between 70 and 90 indicates that minor adjustments may help; a rating between 50 and 70 suggests a major adjustment may be necessary; if you rated yourself below 50, a complete overhaul may be required.

_____ FFA Chapter PALS Application

Program Description and Requirements

Our definition of a mentor is: A person who is willing to accept limits on their "social" behavior to commit to the program; someone who can put a younger person's needs before their own and will be "tough" yet "caring" when a student does not want to work on academics. A person who is willing to "adjust" his or her attitude and make a commitment to being a role model for his or her PAL seven days a week.

The PALS class meets daily. You will work with the elementary students three or four days each week. You get credit for PSD Ag 312 and PALS. There is also one after-school or weekend activity every six weeks. This activity counts as your six weeks project grade. Your grade will be based on attendance, attitude toward working with your pal, and responsibility. A point system and journal are also required by the state.

You will receive strikes for various discipline problems you may encounter. When you have accumulated three strikes, you go before a "jury" of the other PALS students that will decide whether you remain in the program or change your schedule. The agriculture teacher and counselor decide all disciplinary questions and will consider all circumstances surrounding the situation. Three things may constitute immediate removal from the program:

- 1) abusive to the children,
- 2) girl becoming pregnant, and
- 3) boy fathering a child.

All information about the children in this program is confidential. The agriculture teacher and counselor reserve the right to interview all applicants and make selections based on applications and/or interviews.

HANDOUT #19

What Do You Do With a Child Like This?

I'VE YET TO MEET a troubled child who wasn't, above all else, terribly lonely. I presume loneliness even before I see the child.

EMOTIONALLY disturbed children are distinguished by their regrettable ability to elicit from others exactly the opposite of what they really need.

SO MANY troubled children keep jackets or caps on during the day. They need the physical protection for a fragile psyche; or perhaps they simply don't feel welcome and are keeping themselves ready to leave. The jacket will come off when the child feels a sense of purpose and belonging.

EVERYTHING disturbed children do has a clear purpose to them and makes perfect sense within their view of the world. That's the fascinating puzzle—their view of the world.

Behind troubled eyes: THERE IS SOMETHING about the eyes of abused children—a depth, a darkness, an absence of spirit. Scan any classroom and you will find those eyes. Scan any classroom and they will find you.

"ATTENTION SEEKING BEHAVIORS" is an unfortunate phrase. It sounds so devious. Children who seek attention are children who need attention. The behavior may be ignored, but not the need.

THE HURT that troubled children create is never greater than the hurt they feel.

AT ANY GIVEN MOMENT, the child would prefer to be seen by peers as bad rather than dumb. Some children make a career of it.

A CHILD placed among a group of smarter students will improve his/her performance. Call it osmosis, call it peer influence if you like, but it's true. Unfortunately, this is not what we usually do with special children.

I'VE NEVER HAD a serious argument with a child who accepted something to eat from me upon arriving at my office.

GIVE DISCOURAGED STUDENTS one task that makes them feel important. One clear reason for them to walk in the door.

YOUR ABILITY to accurately perceive a child's inner needs is the source for the most effective interventions available to you.

WHEN WORKING with discouraged children, I make two lists. One itemizes activities which they enjoy. I use this list for contingencies and rewards. The other shows what they value most in life, the things that make their day worthwhile. This list I never make contingent.

What Guidelines Will Be Used to Match Mentors to Mentees?

Consider the following questions when matching mentors and mentees:

1. What is the desired result of the match?
2. How will the application be used?
3. What considerations will be made when there are differences in the gender, ethnicity or socioeconomic status of pairs, etc.?
4. Will mentors and mentees have the opportunity for self-selection? Why or why not?
5. Who from your team will be responsible for this activity?

Also consider the following points before making the final matches:

1. The mentor/mentee relationship serves the needs of the mentee before the mentor.
2. Be sensitive to apprehensions or anxieties of the mentee or mentor when considering a match.
3. Inform parents or guardians about mentor/mentee matches.
4. If the match does not work and if corrective measures do not resolve the problem, create a new match rather than harm the mentee or mentor.
5. The opportunity for a mentee or mentor to be considered for the PALS program is open to all students regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, physical status or national origin.

SECTION 5: RECRUITING & SELECTING MENTORS & MENTEES

Activity 5.3

HANDOUT #21

What Steps Should be Taken if a Match is Not Working?

If the relationship between the mentor and mentee is not working, the team may provide assistance while allowing the mentor and mentee to work the problem out in their own way first. The team must not take sides, blame either party or allow a bad relationship to continue. Consider the following strategies when trying to assist in understanding the problem:

1. Talk with the mentor and/or mentee separately.
2. Bring the mentor and mentee together for a mediated discussion.
3. Introduce the problem to a group of the mentors and try to find some possible solutions.
4. Introduce the problem to a group of the mentees and try to find some possible solutions.
5. If the relationship has no solution for recovery, assist the pair in sorting out what happened, what went wrong and to acceptance of those feelings. Help the pair feel good about themselves.
6. Help the mentor to remember the positive things and what he/she has learned about mentoring in preparing him/her for future mentoring.

What else can your team do to assist mentors and mentees in mending a relationship?
Who will be responsible for this part of the PALS program?

HANDOUT #22

Making it Easy to Say Good-bye to Mentor/Mentee

1. Have mentors think how mentoring has affected their lives.
2. Help mentors learn how to tell their pal about needing to say good-bye.
3. Have mentors assure pals it is okay to feel sad but to look at what they have shared and learned about each other and themselves.
4. Make sure that goals or contracts have been completed.
5. Take a mentor/mentee group photo.
6. Organize an end-of-year awards ceremony, banquet or picnic.

List Other Ideas:

- 7.
- 8.
- 9.
- 10.

Note: By incorporating end-of-year activities, one can help pairs end their relationships on a positive note. Also, they may decide to stay in touch through the summer on their own. Fun and laughter help soften tough situations.

PALS

Partners in Active Learning Support

(Date)

Dear Parents:

The PALS program involves giving high school students a new role of responsibility—that of mentors. In addition, the program establishes a new relationship between the high school mentor and an elementary school student (mentee) who is being mentored. For the mentee, this is a special experience of having an older student listen to them and is similar to having a big brother or sister.

The selected high school mentors will begin mentoring on _____ (date). They will mentor elementary students at _____ (site), from _____ to _____ (time), on _____ (day or days). The mentors and mentees will be supervised at all times by the PALS Team Coordinator or other assigned team member. In addition, the mentors will be trained in the mentoring process by a PALS team member. In the training, the students will learn various aspects about mentoring as well as how to improve their self-management skills.

Due to the importance of beginning a new program, we will need to use some personal information from their files such as grades and any referrals made, etc. We will not be using any student names on the information gathered for reports; but we do need to know how the student is progressing in his or her studies. Please do not hesitate to contact one of us or _____ (program coordinator) at _____ (phone), if you have any questions.

Partners in Active Learning Support

Dear Parents:

Your child has been selected to participate in the _____ (school's name) FFA PALS program. This is a mentoring program involving selected FFA members (high school students) and selected elementary students. The program's goals are to help younger students have a more positive and productive school experience and to help them make more informed, responsible decisions. The high school students have received training in building self-esteem, communicating, listening and decision-making. They should be very positive role models for the elementary students.

The activities of the program will be many and varied. Most of them will take place at the elementary campus, but occasionally your child may accompany their mentor to an activity at the secondary campus. The county home extension agent will also host some activities for this program. All activities will be under the supervision of the agriscience teachers.

Only a few students could be chosen for this program and we hope you will allow your child to participate. Please sign the consent form below and return it in the enclosed envelope by _____ (date). If you have any questions, please call the agriscience teachers at _____ (phone). If we do not receive the permission slip by the date indicated, another student will be chosen.

Take a large sheet of paper and draw/design a picture of what your group/team envisions your PALS program to be.

Instead of words use graphic symbols, adhesive dots, construction paper, etc. Be as creative, imaginative or cryptic as you wish. Please don't explain your creation to your colleagues. Let others try to guess what it means.

You have ten minutes to complete your design. Materials for creating your masterpiece are available from the instructor.

Fundraising

The following questions will assist you in understanding the kinds of resources you may need for your PALS program.

1. What kinds of services/support do we need for PALS? (financial, human, marketing, in-kind services, materials for projects, etc.)
2. How important is receiving these services/support to the success of PALS?
3. What can we get from whom? (refer to Handout #26 as a guide)

Recommendations:

When selling/marketing your program, make sure you build it up, take brochures, articles, newsletters—anything you have which describes your program and the capacity it has to make a positive difference in the life of a child/children and the impact it can have on the community as a whole.

Brainstorming Activities

In your school team, brainstorm activities on how you can involve PALS participants, families and the community in activities/projects for PALS. Stress the importance of culture within the community when possible.

1. What activities could PALS participants help plan?
2. In what activities could the families be involved? In what capacity?
3. In what activities could the community be involved? In what capacity?
4. How do we include activities in which the culture of the community is a part and the importance of culture is featured?

The National FFA Mentoring Program

The National FFA PALS Program Description

The National FFA PALS Mission Statement

PALS mission is to create positive relationships between high school agriculture students and high-risk elementary students resulting in increased self-esteem and better academic performance for both individuals.

The National FFA PALS Guiding Principles

1. Team Oriented
2. Committed to Diversity
3. Possess Unlimited Capacity for Growth
4. Honesty
5. Two-Way Open Communication
6. Promote the Sharing of Ideas
7. Encourage Risk-Taking
8. Dedicated to Empowering Kids

The National FFA PALS Overview

PALS is a mentoring program that matches high school agriculture students with elementary students to help them get excited about school, explore their interests in plants and animals, and develop their personal skills. Mentoring activities will center around building trust and developing positive self-esteem through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship at least once a week. The mentoring role is a major commitment for the high school student. The mentors are selected to help build the human resource potential of a young child as well as that of themselves. The mentors will receive training from high school and elementary counselors and agriculture teachers when they are not working with elementary students.

Things to Remember When Working With Younger Children

- Trust
 - the student is smart
 - the student can learn
 - you can teach
 - by working together, both of you can succeed
- Explain
 - say what is to be learned in simple words
 - highlight key ideas to be remembered
 - use memory hooks such as pictures, graphs, sounds, actions, etc.
- Show
 - demonstrate the skill
 - stress main points
 - answer questions
 - stress benefits of your way of doing things
- Practice
 - have student try the skill
 - coach the student, highlighting what was done well
 - tell the student, in a positive way, where improvement is needed
- Apply
 - student teaches you
 - stress main points
 - repeat and give feedback
- Assess
 - student tells you what was easy, what was hard, and how it felt
 - ask student to tell you how well he/she performed
 - check back on all you did to teach, identify things you did well and items that need improving
- Validate
 - review student's success, strengths and progress
 - tell student about the positive personal qualities you've observed
 - ask student to tell you about the positive personal qualities he/she observed in you
- Plan
 - contract with the student for the next skill, lesson, or project to be learned or worked on

Mentor Responsibilities

- Be aware of the important impact culture, socioeconomic status, experiences, etc., have on how the mentee sees and processes information. Become comfortable with the fact that the mentee is different from you and may approach evaluating, perceiving, acting and behaving differently than you do.
- Be careful to respect the mentee's orientation and not to impose your values, assumptions, perceptions and biases on the mentee. Be aware of your own attitudes, beliefs and feelings and how these "filters" may bias your judgment.
- Help your mentee accomplish tasks but be careful not to hold preconceived limitations about what the mentee can or cannot do. Be sure that your helping style recognizes the limitations, but does not attempt to replace the mentee's personal efforts. Always remember that you are to assist not do the task.
- Acquire specific knowledge about the mentee with whom you work. If you find out they have major problems at home or at school, be careful not to ask too many questions about this uncomfortable situation. If you come up with a situation you do not feel comfortable handling, seek help or guidance from the counselor, teacher or principal. Take special precautions not to become too emotionally attached to your mentee. If a mentee makes a habit of bringing you gifts or giving you personal or private notes, try to discourage this habit. Never respond back with a written note.
- Help your mentee make assessments about behavior, thoughts and actions as they try new activities. Help them see the benefit of trying. Help the mentee take risks in trying new behaviors and give support when necessary.
- Be consistent with feedback. Be clear, concise and direct. The mentee should learn to respond to verbal rewards. It is best not to give the mentee gifts as it may become expected.
- Help the mentee by generating a variety of responses or alternatives to situations.
- Keep promises to your mentee, such as showing up at agreed time. Do not make promises you cannot keep.
- Plan activities with your teacher/advisor, cooperating elementary teachers, cooperating agency, other mentors and the mentees.
- Prepare for and complete the tasks you agree to do.
- Follow the rules of your school and of the elementary school while working with the mentee.
- Contact your mentee's teacher ahead of time and get permission if you will be eating lunch at the elementary school with your mentee, taking them for a special activity during lunch time, or meeting with your mentee at any other special time during the school day.
- Let your agriculture teacher and the mentee's teacher know if you are going to be absent or cannot do the task you agreed to do. Make arrangements to do it another time.

Mentor Roles and Responsibilities

Review your roles and responsibilities often and remember these four things each time you meet with your mentee:

1. Be excited and friendly each time you meet.
2. Ask how the child feels that day and what has happened at school, home, or in their other activities since you last saw him/her.
3. Share your feelings and things going on in your life.
4. Remember you are a role model. Mind your manners, do not chew gum or eat candy in front of them. Watch your use of slang words and always try to use good grammar. Please remove your caps/hats when you are in a building.

1. If your pal asks who your parents are, think about how you want to give them this information. If you live with someone other than your parents, give them their relationship and name.
2. Think through everything you have done in FFA, such as:
 - offices you have held
 - leadership teams
 - judging teams
 - livestock shows
 - other activities
3. If your pal asks you how long you have been involved in FFA and this is your first year, say one year. If this is your first year and your pal asks what project(s) you are involved in, say a leadership project and a recreation project. If you are an FFA member, think about the projects in which you are or have been involved. You can add a leadership project and a recreation project to your list if you would like.
4. Determine the most important school activities with which you have been involved so you can list them quickly and in their order of importance.
5. What other things are you involved in outside of school? List them below.
6. Think of a short answer to the following questions your pal might ask:
 - a. Why did you want to become a mentor?
 - b. Why did you apply to be involved in PALS?

Developing a Press Release

When developing a press release, keep in mind the people for whom it is written and the information you would want if you were in that group. When you want an event to be covered by the media, send the release at least two weeks prior to the event and invite them to participate. Send the release to the community affairs or news departments of newspapers, radio and television stations. Be sure to include the following information:

- Type of event: date, time and location
- Purpose: why you're holding it
- Participants: who (include those who might entice the press to attend)
- Background: information on the organization and program
- Photo Opportunity: description of the visual opportunities for print and television media
- Contact: name and telephone number of a person to call for more information.

Guidelines for preparing press releases:

- Do not exceed two double-spaced pages.
 - Be sure to include a contact person's name and telephone number.
 - Describe the event or significant program benchmark.
 - Include quotations from participants and VIPs involved with the program.
-  Follow up with phone calls to media contacts with whom you have developed relationships.

(School) Starts New Mentoring Program

ALEXANDRIA, Va.—The National FFA Organization has named _____ (school), in _____ (town), _____ (state), as a new location for its mentoring program. PALS (Partners in Active Learning Support) matches high school students with elementary students from high need environments. The program is made possible by a grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation as a special project of the National FFA Foundation, Inc.

PALS provides stability and guidance to elementary students who need a little bit of extra support. Local school district personnel identify those students who could benefit from such a program and each selected elementary student is matched with an appropriate high school agriculture student who will serve as their mentor. The mentors guide the elementary students through the year, increasing their chances for success in school and life. At the same time, the mentors develop their leadership and interpersonal communications skills.

_____ (state) has been selected as one of the 16 PALS states for 1994. Those states participating in PALS include Arizona, Arkansas, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New York, North Dakota, South Carolina, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin.

Mentoring activities will center around building trust, developing self-esteem and sharing interests and activities. Young peoples' natural interests in animals and plants will serve as catalysts through which the educational component of the program will be delivered.

Dr. Larry Case, national FFA advisor, is enthused about the program. Case says, "The aim of FFA is to develop young people through agricultural education. That goal is attained when FFA members accept responsibility for helping to develop a child for the good of their individual communities and their society. The PALS experience builds maturity and self-worth in the older youth while providing an invaluable service to the younger child. We are very pleased to have the opportunity to implement a program that will make a positive difference in the lives of so many young people."

PALS is a direct outgrowth of the Strategic Plan for Agricultural Education. The mission of agricultural education is to provide a total, dynamic educational system which contributes to personal, academic and career development of the whole person through leadership, personal and interpersonal training.

FFA is a national organization of more than 420,000 members preparing for leadership and careers in the science, business and technology of agriculture. The organization has 7,500+ local chapters located throughout the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands. FFA's mission is to make a positive difference in the lives of students by developing their potential for premier leadership, personal growth and career success through agricultural education. Local, state and national activities and award programs provide opportunities for students to apply knowledge and skills learned in the classroom.

HASKELL PROJECT PALS NEWS & PROGRESS

The Haskell High School FFA and the Haskell County 4-H organizations are currently working cooperatively to implement a pilot project being funded this year by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation through the National FFA Organization. The PALS (Peer Assistance Leadership) project is a mentoring project that pairs a high school student (mentor) with a fourth grade student (mentee). The 1992-93 HASKELL PALS are:

MENTORS	MENTEES
Quinten Billington	Jimmy Rojo
Stephen Campbell	Angel Castorena
Blake Henshaw	Ted Harvey
Holly Hobgood	Toni Crane
Shawn Jordan	Michelle McWhorter
Brandon McFadden	Kendra Walsh
Shana McKenzie	B.J. Scott and Keisha Woodard
Heather Stewart	Cynthia Soto
Jason Torres	Robert Spells

The project being developed locally is designed to combine both leadership and subject matter skills learned in Ag classes, FFA, and 4-H activities into a community program that will help participants develop marketable social skills while generating school, community, and parental involvement. The program currently has a total of 19 FFA and 4-H members involved (9-high school age and 10-4th graders). The group meets each Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. in either the ag building or the County Extension Office kitchen. The group also is involved in special 4-H recreational activities held outside of school hours.

THE FOLLOWING ARE MAJOR ACTIVITIES THAT HAVE BEEN CARRIED OUT SINCE THE PROJECT WAS IMPLEMENTED IN OCTOBER:

- The mentors (H.S. students) appeared on the Harry Holt T.V. Show.
- The group carved Halloween pumpkins and placed in strategic spots on school campuses and in the community. The carved pumpkins were used as decorations at the Countywide 4-H Halloween party which the PALS attended.
- The group decorated Halloween cookies to take back to all the other 4th graders.
- The group drew pictures of their families on a large sheet of butcher paper and then discussed their home lives.
- The PALS made the popular Indian bead necklaces.
- The group had breakfast together at which the H.S. PALS did a program on the meaning of Thanksgiving. The H.S. PALS ate Thanksgiving lunch at school with their 4th grade PALS.
- The PALS were invited to ride on the Kiwanis Club float in the annual night Christmas parade.
- During December the group cut, painted, and decorated wooden Christmas ornaments to give to the nursing home residents.
- Each 4th grade PAL made a decoration to take home.
- For Valentines, the PALS made felt heart refrigerator magnets for themselves and the 4th grade students and teachers.

Special thanks go to the following individuals for their time and efforts in helping to develop, implement, and carry out this pilot project.

- OTHER TEAM MEMBERS—James Bevel, Lela Bevel, Richard Holloway, Billie McKeever, and Nancy Toliver
- COOPERATING 4TH GRADE TEACHERS—Paula Everett, Janie Stone, and Jo Nell Trammell
- SCHOOL ADMINISTRATION—William H. Stewart, Supt.; Jim Lisle, Elem. Principal; Greg Melton, HS Principal
- COOPERATING AGENCY—Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Max Stapleton/County Ext. Agent-Ag
- COMPUTER ASSISTANCE—Debi Burson
- PALS HIGH SCHOOL STUDENT AIDE—Shana McKenzie

The local program is coordinated and managed each Friday and for special activities outside school hours by Duane Gilly, Haskell High School Ag-Science Instructor and Lou Gilly, Haskell County Extension Agent-Home Economics.

FFA adds new program

By Cindy Henry

The secondary school now has two PALS groups. Not only is there the original group, organized last year, but also an FFA group.

The purpose for both groups is the same, only the method of funding is different. This year the funding for the FFA chapter is through the National FFA Foundation.

The National FFA Foundation also provides training and materials to assist in building long-lasting student relationships.

"Both the mentor (high school student) and the mentee (elementary student) will grow from the experience," James Bevel, ag teacher, said.

Students attend a specific class for FFA PALS taught by Bevel and Duane Gilly, ag teacher.

Pam Thigpen, art and computer teacher, sponsors the original PALS class. "Both PALS groups are working together to bring the community together," Mrs. Thigpen said.

Once a week, during tutorials and first period, Gilly's and Bevel's ag classes will spend their time at the elementary school.

"We will help them with school work if they need it, but that is not our main objective. Our main objective is to be a positive role model and influence the children's attitudes," member Shana McKenzie said.

Nine of the FFA members will be paired with a student from the elementary school.

"We would like to build self-esteem and help our young kids make goals," Gilly said.

Haskell was one of ten schools in the state chosen to have an FFA PALS. Next year twenty schools will be chosen to join the PALS program.

Their first project will be to assist the original PALS with the red ribbon campaign, Texas' War on Drugs, Oct. 26-30.

Cookies, pumpkins, park FFA PALS busy with activities

This morning the FFA PALS took their mentees to city park.

The two groups usually get together on Friday.

"This is the first real conference they have had," Duane Gilly, co-sponsor, said.

The PALS have had two activity meetings with their elementary students, but today's get-together was more for talking.

"I enjoy being a PAL and getting to know my fourth grader. I hope to make a difference in her life and help her feel more confident about herself," senior Holly Hobgood said.

Last week the PALS and their mentees decorated pumpkin cookies for the fourth graders.

I thought it brought us closer together. We both had fun," junior Heather Stewart said.

The week before the PALS helped with pumpkin carving.

"I never knew carving pumpkins could be so hard, but it was worth it seeing my PAL have fun," junior Jason Torres explained.

The pumpkins were put in various offices and rooms throughout the school.

PALS also helped last week with Texas' War on Drugs Week.

Project Pals benefits students, supporters

BY ANNETTE WALLS

Newport Daily Independent

Tuckerman students will once again be participating in Project Pals, a program designed to provide stability, guidance and support to elementary students by matching them with secondary agriculture students to develop a mentor-mentee relationship.

In order to participate in the program, both the agriculture students and the elementary students must make application to a committee which decides who is most fit to participate in the program.

Once the participants are chosen, a party is held to allow them to mingle in an unrestricted manner. This casual mingling will later determine who will become pals because a natural pairing takes place.

Each week the pals meet to participate in an activity designed to build trust and support through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship.

Among the projects the participants took on in the past is the building of a wooden jungle gym on the elementary playground, building a wooden birdhouse, planting flowers and trees and participating in the Northeast Arkansas District Fair.

Over a period of time a strong bond forms between the pals. This bond allows the mentor to approach his pal with hopes to help him deal with problems which range from controlling anger to dealing with death and divorce.

It doesn't only allow the mentor to be influential; the mentee also has a great deal of influence on the behavior of the mentor.

In an interview with Project Pals participants junior Jamie Anderson and fifth grade pal Chris Eiler; junior Melina Hasket and fourth grade pal Travis Hagar; and senior Donnie Pretty and fourth grade pal Bobby Hubbard, all spoke of how they have helped each other.

"We all had a problem we had to deal with and it's nice to know that I was there to help Bobby (Hubbard),"

Donnie Pretty said. "When I have my own kids, I'll have a better outlook on problems and how to deal with them."

The participants are not the only ones that see a change in the lives of the participants. Project Pals school coordinators Joe Wallis, secondary agriculture teacher, and Linda Wallis, second grade teacher, and Community Coordinator Betty Sapp all see a change in their lives. "I can see a change in both the young ones and the older ones," Sapp said. "The young ones are becoming better listeners and are maturing, while the older ones have become more patient and are falling into a teaching mode."

According to Linda Wallis, some of the students not only take on the role of teacher, but they also act as brothers, sisters and sometimes even parents.

The Tuckerman school was one of 20 schools nationwide chosen as a pilot school for the program in 1991.

Project Pals was originally funded by a grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation in cooperation with the National Future Farmers of America Organization. However, funds are not given to finance individual projects.

One of the major goals of Project Pals is to provide for the development of the whole person through leadership, personal and interpersonal training.

It is believed that with an effort such as Project Pals, the community and surrounding communities can only become more prosperous.

Community volunteers and tax deductible donations are needed to make Project Pals even more successful.

Anyone who wants to find out what he or she can do to brighten the future of the community can contact Joe or Linda Wallis at 528-3002.

Marketing Your PALS Program

Keep the following in mind while planning the strategy for marketing your PALS program:

- 1st • Identify the benefits for your audience.
- 2nd • Earmark a budget.
- 3rd • Devise a month-by-month plan.

Develop clear objectives before doing community outreach and marketing efforts:

- 1st • Obtain support for the concept.
- 2nd • Obtain funding for the program.
- 3rd • Recruit volunteers for the program.

Develop an effective communications strategy which includes choosing your most important audiences and deciding on the best ways to communicate with them. Marketing PALS is an on-going process, follow these strategies for communications planning:

1. Establish the need for PALS to enhance support services.
 - Include community statistics/demographics to demonstrate need.
 - Tie your message into the organization's mission or history.
2. Describe program components and activities.
3. List benefits of PALS program for:
 - Program participants
 - School
 - Community
4. Include an example or case study of a mentoring success story.

The communications strategy should include different forms of promotion. It is important to highlight specific benefits to each audience and to choose the forms of promotion that are practical and appropriate for reaching your different targeted groups.

The following are examples for communicating with specific audiences, the form and the benefits:

1. Business Community

- Objective: Generate funding or other resources.
- Forms of promotion:
 - Presentations to corporate volunteer councils
 - Information packet/brochure and letter to community affairs/public relations department (follow-up with a phone call)
- Benefits of involvement:
 - Publicity as an active, positive business citizen
 - Highly motivated employees who are proud to work for an involved, caring business

2. Local Media

- Objective: Position PALS as a new and exciting way of enhancing community support services.
- Forms of promotion:
 - Send press releases and information packet to community affairs/public relations departments, news departments, columnists and producers of special features.
 - Position PALS as a newsworthy item. Prepare releases from a variety of perspectives, such as:
 - Unique collaboration among a variety of agencies
 - Human interest focus on mentor
 - Issue focus on ultimate goal of PALS; e.g., decreased school dropouts, prevention of substance abuse, career development, community enhancement, etc.
 - Mentoring relationship, the impact of a one-to-one relationship (can be tied into national service, "points of light," volunteerism angle).
 - Develop Public Service Announcements; work with television station to tie into theme of existing media, e.g., volunteer connection
- Benefits of Involvement:
 - Less work for media to research news stories
 - Media positioned as concerned citizen and community partner

3. Civic Organizations

- Objective: Generate in-kind support and volunteers.
- Forms of promotion:
 - Presentations to members
 - Articles in their newsletters/magazines
 - Information packet/brochure and letter to community affairs/public relations departments (follow up with a phone call)

8. Community Foundations/Other Funding Sources

- Objective: Generate contributions and in-kind support.
- Forms of promotion:
 - Formal proposal focusing on the interests and mission of the foundation
- Benefits of involvement:
 - Visibility
 - Tangible enhancement of their mission

Your marketing plan should be detailed but flexible. Take advantage of marketing opportunities. Your best opportunities come from individual success stories and positive program outcomes. Keep a file of success stories—the media love them. And, they're valuable for recruitment.

Plan to develop promotional materials to help achieve your goal. At a minimum you should probably have a brochure and a fact sheet.

PALS Overview

PALS is a mentoring program which matches high school agriculture students with elementary students to help them get excited about school, explore their interests in plants and animals, and develop their personal skills. Mentoring activities will center around building trust and developing positive self-esteem through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship at least once a week. The mentoring role is a major commitment on the part of the high school students. The mentors are selected to help build the human resource potential of a young child as well as that of themselves. The mentors will receive training from high school and elementary counselors and agriculture teachers when they are not working with elementary students.

Trainers and Teachers: Strategies from the Third Grade

Though they're dealing with adults, trainers would be well advised to remember some of the educational basics.

By PAUL S. GEORGE George is a professor of education and human resource development at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

While many of us were looking the other way, a series of important breakthroughs in research on teaching effectiveness have been occurring in the public school world. At the same time that Ouchi, Peters and

Waterman were conducting their research on the characteristics of high performance corporations, educational researchers were carrying out less well-known but very similar studies of the nation's most masterful public school teachers. The findings indicate that just as high-powered corporations have a great deal in common in spite of product differences, masterful teachers follow a similar set of strategies in spite of the subject level and often with very different age groups.

Researchers are justifiably cautious about transferring into the area teaching strategies that work well in a very different situation – areas as different, for example, as corporate training and teaching third grade. But many educators with experience in both settings realize that the worlds of teaching and training have a great deal in common. What works well in one setting often works just as well in the other.

What follows is a brief synthesis of the recent breakthroughs in research on effective teaching, highlighting the “secrets” that have produced increased learning and achievement in the public school setting and have special promise for corporate classrooms. As mentioned above, master teachers follow some very common pathways to excellence. Master trainers would do well to look carefully at the paths these teachers take and to think about how those strategies would work in a corporate training setting.

Positive Structure

Classroom mastery in any setting depends upon effective classroom management. Research makes it clear that the best instructors rely on a secret that might be called positive structure: Their teaching or training setting is highly structured but allows students to enjoy the learning process. Several dozen studies reveal that positive structure doesn't just emerge naturally; it is the result of specific instructor behaviors outlined below.

- Rehearsal. Award-winning theater productions spend a great deal of time in rehearsals and road shows before they open on Broadway. And championship sailing ships spend much more time being readied for the voyage than they spend on the water. Likewise, master instructors spend a great deal of time before the course, class, or school year preparing their students for the experience. They establish clear rules, routines and expectations every time. The course doesn't really begin until everyone understands how it will operate and where it is heading.

The most effective instructors not only establish ground rules and routines, they model them for the students and very carefully monitor participants' performance in these areas. Masters in the classroom know that how they manage the first few class periods will fix learning levels and behaviors for the remainder of the course.

- Time on task. Master instructors know that in the business world time is money, but in the classroom time is the currency of learning. Regardless of educational setting, there is a direct connection between the amount of time used for learning and the amount of actual learning that occurs. Classroom masters make certain that no time is wasted.

Using time wisely means a number of things. For example, breaks are often dangerous because 10-minute breaks often expand to 20 minutes. Effective classroom managers cut down on the number and the length of breaks, establishing very clear signals to let everyone know it's time to get back to work.

Master instructors know that when it comes to time and learning, the longer the participants keep working, the more they learn. Period. Certainly everyone from third graders to third-level managers needs to relax, to change pace, to rest. But high-achieving classrooms are characterized by fewer breaks, fewer interruptions.

Instructors in these classrooms preserve time in several ways, one of the most important being their attention to transitions. When changing from one activity to another, the educator carefully plans and closely monitors the transition. He or she keeps on hand all the necessary materials for the new activity.

- Warm but businesslike. The highest academic achievement comes from classrooms where the instructor is warm and friendly but businesslike. Cold, aloof educators, as well as those who spend all their time socializing with the students, produce less learning.

Maximum learning occurs when the instructor is neither severe and withdrawn nor intimidated by the students. The master educator shows students that he or she is in charge and that there is a great deal of work to do, but that everyone is likely to enjoy it as long as work is the central focus of attention. These classroom managers push students who dawdle and daydream, refusing to accept peace in exchange for letting the students refuse to participate.

When confrontations do occur, effective instructors do everything possible to defuse and depersonalize the situation, avoiding public power struggles. They more often resort to the secret of "praise in public, punish in private." Confrontations with students of any age are always losing propositions for the instructor. Even if the educator intimidates the student into a temporary withdrawal from the scene of the battle, the student almost certainly will return later, more fully prepared to defeat the instructor.

Curriculum Alignment

Managing a classroom with positive structure doesn't assure instructor mastery. The most effective educators also apply a strategy that might be called curriculum alignment. High achievement in corporate and public school classrooms depends upon the instructor's ability to fit into a specific class or course plan the goals of the organization, what the instructor teaches, and what the students actually learn. Curriculum alignment means that all course or class time is aimed at the knowledge, skills or attitudes that are supposed to be taught and learned. Effective curriculum alignment is quality control applied to the classroom—control that narrows the gap between desired outcomes and actual student achievement.

Because only master educators actually do it effectively, curriculum alignment may seem far more difficult and time consuming than it really is. The following 10 steps taken by master instructors comprise the secret of curriculum alignment:

- The instructor begins planning the course by examining carefully the organizational goals and the objectives for the curriculum area in question.
- The instructor then investigates a variety of content options that he or she might use to teach these goals.

- The instructor next examines the needs and current knowledge levels of the targeted group of learners.
- When the instructor is clear about the goals and objectives that he or she needs to teach and the needs and status of the targeted learners, the instructor develops a clear and measurable set of specific learning objectives for this class and its students. The instructor puts these objectives in writing and shares them with the students at the very beginning of the course.
- The instructor develops a reasonable standard for student mastery—such as 80 percent—and then develops a strategy that is based on the assumption that all the students will reach or exceed that standard. The instructor abandons the so-called normal curve.
- The instructor divides the objectives into distinct teaching units that organize the learning experience into smaller pieces.
- The instructor then plots these units over the length of the course or year, perhaps in order of difficulty, with plenty of catch-up and enrichment time built in for slower and faster students.
- The instructor plans whole-group, teacher-directed lessons where, regardless of the teaching methods utilized, he or she is at the center of the instructional process, not a passive observer at the edge of the stage.
- The instructor develops formative tests for each separate unit and a test that covers the major concepts, skills and attitudes of the entire course. The instructor clearly bases all tests on the goals and objectives determined earlier.

- As a last step the instructor evaluates the course, assessing the degree to which it successfully met its goals and objectives and making improvements for the next run.

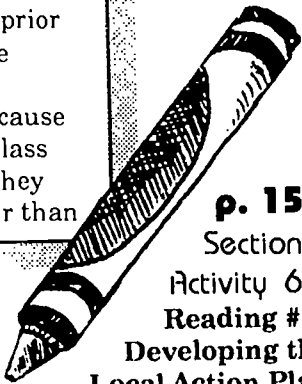

Research in public school classrooms indicates that when any one of these 10 steps is omitted or short-changed, academic achievement is likely to suffer. Learning fails when educators passively accept whatever they are given without making it directly applicable to specific learners and situations. When instructors simply march from page to page in the syllabus or textbook without heeding the goals and objectives of the organization or the needs of the learners, the course becomes a long march for everyone involved.

Set Induction

Master teachers in public schools know the importance of set induction: creating a classroom climate that ensures everything gets off to the right start. Just as the first few episodes of each course help to determine the ultimate success of the whole, research indicates that the first few minutes of every class establish a “set” that helps determine the level of learning throughout the period or session. Effective classroom managers pay close attention to starting off well, and the best instructors use a similar repertoire, outlined below.

- Preclass availability. Higher achievement occurs in classrooms where, prior to the beginning of instruction, the instructor engages in a variety of interactions with the learners. Because the best educators know that preclass time is important teaching time, they spend it with their students rather than in preparing to teach. They exchange casual, friendly greetings and have warm conversations with students, often answering questions from previous sessions. These instructors are available, not preoccupied with arranging materials they should have taken care of long before the first few minutes of class.

- No delays. When the time to teach arrives, the most effective instructors permit no delays. Usually a formal signal—such as flicking the lights on and off—lets students know that the time is over for casual interaction and preparation and that it is now time to work. Students know that searching for materials they should have brought with them, using the bathroom, or making a phone call no longer is appropriate. The master instructor recognizes his or her authority to tell students to stop dawdling and start working.
- Colorful, neat displays. The way the classroom looks affects students' mental attitudes toward the room. Higher learning achievement occurs in classrooms that are designed and decorated in ways that appeal to the learners. Bulletin boards, displays of relevant materials, objects that are part of the instruction to come, and other attention-getters are always present in the classrooms of master instructors. These educators know the atmosphere of the classroom has an impact on learning in much the same way a car showroom is organized to step up consumer interest in a new automobile. They don't leave "classroom marketing" to chance.
- Teacher responsibility. Instructors who excel take responsibility for student learning. Master educators believe when the students fail, the teacher has failed. Research indicates that when public school teachers have this attitude, they act in ways that make learning happen more effectively. The same situation very likely prevails in corporate classrooms.

- Review and rehearsal. Every lesson begins with a careful review of what has gone before, not just a cursory mention of what happened yesterday. The instructor engages the participants in a planned rehearsal of the main points they encountered in previous sessions. When the class is over, both instructor and students are clear about what they need to know in order to do well for the next day or class.
- Overview. Following this careful review, master instructors conduct a relatively lengthy overview of the current lesson, including an illustration of why the lesson is important to the learners and their futures. The overview points out the objectives for the lesson—the major points the instructor will cover. In the hands of a master, the overview often includes an outline of the lesson resembling a written "road map" of the lesson to come.

Effective instructors use all sorts of strategies to induce a mental attitude that will lead to the highest levels of learning. They know if they begin the class casually and loosely, the students will do the same. Master educators know the results recorded at the end of the course are often determined by how the participants approach the starting line.

Structured Momentum

Once the class begins, the most important secret to attaining higher levels of learning is to keep the process moving. Master instructors understand structured momentum in the same way that exemplary athletic coaches and military leaders do. They all know that once the group is moving in the right direction, success depends on doing everything possible to maintain forward progress. Recent investigations indicate that the best teachers and, possibly, trainers keep momentum going by structuring their teaching in three very important ways.

- Authentic enthusiasm. Several studies confirm the importance of vocal variety, large gestures, body movement, smiling, and other positive facial features. Other research makes it clear that a high level of enthusiasm is closely connected to learning. While these findings might seem to be common sense, it is only recently that the most hard-headed researchers have confirmed the importance of instructor enthusiasm.
- Concreteness. Many students have little interest or skill in vague abstractions and cloudy concepts. Instructors who make a difference take special efforts to make what they teach as concrete as possible. Research identifies a number of ways this is done.

The most effective educators avoid instruction that leaves students buried under tons of verbiage by using visual techniques, including demonstrations, whenever possible. They accompany their lessons with media of all kinds and use actual physical objects to make their points more vivid. Such instructors also physically model behaviors and skills they hope their students will learn.

Effective instructors also establish concreteness by displaying key terms and points on a chalkboard, flip chart, overhead projector, or bulletin board. By using symbols, shapes and colors to stand for words, these educators attack the nonverbal, right-brain learning capabilities of the participants. Using key phrases like, "Listen carefully here," or, "Pay close attention to this," also helps establish concreteness. Marker techniques like highlighting, underlining, starring and bulleting also help focus participant attention on the most important points and concepts.

Concreteness also means using frequent reviews, summaries, examples, and question-and-answer sessions to reinforce what participants have learned until it becomes automatic. The best teachers in the public schools stick with a subject until the largest possible portion of the students "get it." They know that merely covering the subject once can't insure that participants really have learned it.

- Active teaching. Dozens of research studies now make it clear that particular methods don't matter nearly as much as the teacher being at the center of the instructional strategy. Momentum evaporates quickly when educators release students to work on their own. In the most high-achieving classrooms, the instructor always closely monitors independent work. Instructors who use independent work as a time to take it a bit easier are in for trouble.

Recent research, in fact, indicates that some of the most old-fashioned teaching techniques still are among the most effective. Educators who depart from the tried-and-true strategies of presentation, recitation, demonstration, drill and practice take sizeable risks.

Guided Practice

More than one quaint Chinese aphorism wisely describes teaching as more than just telling. Expert instructors at all levels know the secret of guided practice, and research now confirms it is of crucial importance if learning is to last beyond 24 hours. Guided practice means the educator engages the students in carefully using what they have learned. This allows the instructor to determine how well the students have learned the subject, to reteach when necessary, and to reinforce the learning to the point that it becomes a permanent acquisition. As described below, the instructor can use guided practice on either a group or an independent basis.

- Group practice. A century ago group practice was called recitation: the practice of leading students through a series of questions and answers in which they demonstrated the level of mastery they had attained in the current lesson. Research in the last decade indicates what worked a century ago still is an important part of the master instructor's repertoire.

The effective classroom manager insists on group practice. He or she doesn't assume students have learned without checking that assumption carefully. Such instructors don't ask, "Does anyone have a question?" and then assume that because no one raises a hand all have learned what they needed to know. Nor does the expert instructor call on a few volunteers and assume that when those people answer correctly the whole class has learned.

Effective guided practice requires equal opportunity for participation in the group experience. In the most effective classes, research indicates that instructors call on volunteers no more than 10 to 15 percent of the time. Sometimes instructors use a systematic pattern that lets them get around to everyone. All the students stay alert and involved because they know they will be called on, even though they don't know what question they'll have to answer. The educator avoids calling on students solely because they are seated in the front or the back of the room. Everyone is involved.

Research has even validated such a traditional practice as choral responding, in which groups of students reply in unison to questions asked by the instructor. Having students call out an answer in unison or write down a response on their paper while the teacher circulates, checking on the accuracy of the responses, are among the choral responding techniques that instructors can use effectively in almost any classroom.

Question-and-answer sessions are a large part of successful guided group practice in the most high-achieving situations, and research confirms certain practices as essential. For example, instructors who reach the highest levels of achievement with their students often prepare large numbers of good questions in advance. They spend a lot of time asking simple questions, short recall items with a very high degree—85 to 90 percent—of student success.

Effective instructors don't let errors pass without being corrected. They give students time to think about the answer to a question before they move on to another student or answer the question themselves. Research indicates that the average instructor waits about one second while the most effective educators wait about three seconds after asking questions. And the best instructors almost always engaged students in summaries of the Q & A session, pointing out and reinforcing the major points covered.

- Independent practice. Master educators know that independent practice is important but very dangerous. Realizing that students' attention to the task can take a disastrous dive when they're turned loose for independent practice, the best teachers guide that practice very carefully. They plan independent work as carefully as they plan their lectures and Q & A sessions, making certain that this practice fits directly with those preceding activities.

Exceptional instructors highly structure independent practice and monitor it well. They make certain the work is meaningful and challenging and students can experience success only when they put out a reasonable amount of effort. Whether students are working together in groups or individually, and whether they are discussing case studies or working practice problems, master instructors conduct independent practice with the greatest care.

Targeted Individualization

The most successful instructors realize that no matter how they group and schedule a class and no matter what strategies they use to organize a course, any group of learners represent a set of skills, attitudes, and knowledge that is incredibly broad. They realize they have no choice but to individualize. But these instructors also know that individualization must be highly targeted. They know the secret of targeted individualization.

Experts never begin a class or a course without assessing the range of differences in student knowledge, skill and attitude. The best instructors never assume that everyone in a class or course needs exactly the same content delivered in the same dosage. They know they have to plan the seating charts with those differences in mind. They use flexible evaluation and grading systems—techniques that focus on individual progress rather than student-to-student comparisons. Master educators use a great deal of large-group, teacher-directed, whole-class instruction, but they always use these techniques with creative and tailored options, choices and alternatives students may pursue on their own. In the best classes, students are able to report that they had a say in what they studied and how they studied it.

The most masterful educators know that presentation doesn't equal learning and that the older the students are, the more active role they must play in designing their own learning experiences. In the most effectively managed classrooms, targeted individualization means that older, more responsible, and more mature student groups will need less common learning and content. There will be less material that all the students have to learn.

Teaching Package Offers City Kids a Slice of Farm Life

National Farm-City Week has been celebrated annually since 1955. For the first time this year, the National Farm-City Council has developed teaching materials designed to help children understand more about the interdependence of the farm and the city.

The Student Lessons In Consumer Education (SLICE) were "designed to attract the attention of city children," says Marsha Purcell, secretary/treasurer of the Farm-City Council of American Farm Bureau. The goal is to help urban students learn about the important role that farmers play in providing food and products for the city. SLICE lessons focus on pizza, a favorite food of nearly every child, whether urban or rural.

The SLICE lessons are designed for both primary and intermediate students. They include activities for math, social studies, language arts, and science. For a math activity, students graph their favorite pizza toppings. They also learn to create Venn diagrams—interlocking circles that offer another way of recording data.

The SLICE materials also help students learn how farm products move through the marketing system from production to consumption. In an activity titled "From the Farm to My House," primary school children draw pictures of what favorite food items looked like on the farm . . . and then what they look like when they reach the table.

This year, Farm-City Week will be celebrated November 20-26. Kits are available for $3, which includes postage and handling. Make checks out to National Farm-City Council, Inc., send to 225 Touhy Avenue, Park Ridge, IL 60068.

SLICE materials help students understand how a product moves from farm to table.

Addressing Meeting Misbehavior

It is important to establish a community of mutual respect feelings in your youth group meetings. You give 4-H'ers a role in developing rules, procedures, and standards of behavior and in determining consequences for misbehavior. This investment usually pays off in fewer behavior problems, but from time to time misbehavior rears its ugly head. When it does, you need on-the-spot solutions.

You will find the listed strategies useful for banishing behavior problems in your youth meetings. The strategies will also serve you well in creating a positive learning environment for the entire group.

On-the Spot Solutions

Before you exert direct control over a child's behavior, it is best to try less intrusive strategies like the following:

1. Talk with the child privately. Try to arrive at a solution by consensus.
2. Change the situation or environment in which an undesirable behavior occurs. For example, change room arrangements, the time of day you meet, where you stand in relation to the child and so on.
3. Describe the desired behavior: "Bill, please listen to what I am saying."
4. Prompt the desired behavior using cues: "What I am going to say next is very important."
5. Model the desired behavior.

After trying these and nothing seems to work, you may need to move to more structured strategies – those that reinforce desired behaviors – or reward children for not engaging in undesirable behavior (using praise, point or token systems). Extreme strategies, such as taking away privileges and using time-out, merit discussion with your supervisor and the child's parents first. Such approaches may be viewed as punishment which could create negative attitudes toward you and 4-H.

Name-Calling

Most children engage in name-calling, use foul language and verbally abuse others at one time or another. However, when a student persists in this behavior, it is time to intervene:

- Talk privately with the child. Make sure he knows the meaning of the words used and their effect on others' feelings.
- Offer substitute words to use.
- Teach self-control; ask the child to walk away from people or situations that make him or her angry.

Hitting and Pushing

These behaviors are forms of aggression. In dealing with aggressive acts, be calm, objective, unemotional and very direct.

- Reinforce time spent not hitting or pushing. Use tokens or points to be traded later for other rewards.
- Have the child pay a fine, either in time (five minutes for each push) or privilege (outdoor play at home, if parents will cooperate).
- For more severe and frequent aggression, have the child use physical energy in private, such as hitting a punching bag. Clear with parents and supervisors first.

Tattling

Tattling is immature behavior and is reinforced by the attention a child receives for it. Tattling can also give a child control over another. Before you implement strategies for tattling, be sure groups understand the differences between "telling on someone" and letting the leader know about a real problem.

- Give frequent attention for good behavior.
- Ignore all forms of tattling. This strategy removes your attention from the situation. But be sure to appraise the situation first, in case a real problem exists.
- If tattling continues, give your attention or a special privilege only when the child stops tattling for an appropriate amount of time.

Dawdling

Group members who won't get to work may be particularly frustrating for you. Consequently, you may be reinforcing dawdling by repeatedly asking the child to get to work.

- Determine if the child is capable of doing the task. If not, he or she may be avoiding the strong possibility of failure. Change the task.
- Ask yourself if hidden influences are controlling the child's reluctance to get to work, such as not wanting to be successful because of peer disapproval.
- Reinforce ever three to five problems attempted (and later completed successfully), at least in the beginning.
- Reinforce gradual steps toward increasing the amount of work completed.
- Have a timer sound at varying intervals; if the young person is working when the timer beeps, give praise or a token to be traded later.
- Write a contract specifying on-task behavior and consequences.

Poking and Touching

Persons who annoy others by poking and touching are seeking attention, but social rejection is often the consequence. Usually general strategies work well.

- Place the person away from others, especially during independent work.
- Take away a valued privilege for each incidence of poking.
- Use time-out only if poking is particularly annoying and occurs frequently.

Won't Sit Still

Overactivity may be sign of immaturity. It might also occur because of demands that restrict movement to a marked degree. Or it may be a sign that it's time to change an activity.

- Try to be more accepting of motor activity, especially in younger children.
- Privately explain that some activities, such as tapping fingers on a table, are annoying to others. The child may be unaware of the effect his or her behavior has on others.
- Monitor the behavior by using an interval timer. If the child is on-task and sitting still, give reinforcement.
- Shorten the length of different activities so the child can change seats and shift focus.
- If the overactivity is potentially harmful, such as leaning a chair back, establish a rule for all to see. Be sure to enforce it.

Talking Back

Youth who talk back and argue may get on your nerves, especially if they talk back to you. When arguing between youths gets out of hand, it can lead to hitting and fighting. Because no one likes to be argued with, the consequence is often social rejection.

- During a private talk, learn if the verbal exchange is truly arguing or simply inappropriate use of language to state a belief. If you feel it is the latter, teach how to disagree with others while standing firm on one's belief. Model ways to do this, for example, by saying, "I have a different belief. May I explain it to you?"
- Conduct training in debating that involves all group members.
- Ignore back talk during discussions as much as possible.
- Call on the person or ask a question when there is no talking back and when language use is considerate of others.
- Discuss the situation with parents. Hidden causes may be found that can be corrected with their cooperation. For example, a child who talks back may have a bossy older sibling. Talking back may be the child's way of self affirmation.

Lying, Cheating, Stealing

Dishonesty occurs all too often, even in younger groups. Stretching the facts and taking things that belong to others are behaviors that are very difficult to confirm without possibly embarrassing confrontations. Cheating often leads to higher marks in situations where the value of a rating is over-represented by leaders, parents or peers. Lying may occur to avoid punishment. Stealing may be a person's only way to get supplies. When these behaviors become persistent, you must be concerned about the child's emotional development and make appropriate referrals. In other cases, start with a private talk.

- Privately, describe the situation objectively.
- Deal directly with the problem by using rules and consequences. For example, do not give credit for work earned by cheating.
- Investigate the reason for cheating. Is the project too difficult for the child?
- Allow the truth to be told without excessive punishment.
- If property damage is involved, require the child to make retribution in some way.
- Help the child regain his club members' trust. Plan activities in which children can prove their trustworthiness. For example, let the child be in charge of collecting money for a club activity or event.
- If dishonesty persists, plan a parent conference. Explain the situation and solicit cooperation.

Complaining About No Playmates

Children who complain about having no friends are saying that they feel socially isolated. These persons are not accepted by peers and are typically out of step in terms of dress, mannerisms and so on. Social skills training may be needed.

- During a private talk, find out how the child spends time at home. Encourage the youth to join activities that require interaction with others.
- Observe the child's interaction with others. A child who makes fun of or needles others will often be left out of club mates' activities.
- If the child has few social skills, use role play in private to develop specific skills.

Unprepared to Work

Children who are always without supplies and assignments often create ingenious excuses. They usually borrow materials from others, including you. When materials are given, the unpreparedness is reinforced. You need a plan to build personal responsibility.

- During a talk, determine if a financial hardship is the cause. If so, find out if some resources are available for the child.
- Make sure you reinforce the child when she is prepared.
- Provide verbal reminders, notes to take home and checklists to help parents monitor what their children need to bring to 4-H meetings.

As a Member of a Group I Should Remember

- That I am one of a group, and that each member has a contribution to make, so I will feel that I am important to the group and I will also respect other members.
- That what I think is as necessary as what others think, so I will try to present my ideas as clearly and constructively as possible.
- That to remain silent or withhold differing opinions is not helpful to the group in thinking through problems, and I should not feel resistant when someone differs with me.
- That to participate too much, monopolize the discussion, or be too insistent in my viewpoint can be detrimental to the functioning of the group, so should be avoided.
- That I am learning and working with others and, therefore, I need to cooperate and be concerned for harmonious relations in the group.
- I should volunteer readily when I think my services and abilities will be useful to the group and I have time that will be required.
- When I have undertaken a responsibility, I should carry through with it until successfully completed.
- I should be willing to confer with others, accept the offers of assistance of others, and generously acknowledge the contributions of others whenever recognition is due.
- I should suspend judgment until facts are known and base decisions upon objective data.
- I should be careful not to make irresponsible statements, repeat confidential information, or stir up feelings which are antagonistic to good group work.

PALS is a mentoring program in affiliation with the National FFA Organization. This program involves sixteen eleventh and twelfth grade agriculture students from McCullough High School who are mentors to sixteen Hailey Elementary students ranging from second to fourth grades.

Each week, the mentors travel to Hailey by bus in order to meet with the mentees for an hour. During this time, the group of students participates in planned activities. The activities for the '92-'93 school year have included such things as tutoring sessions, cooperative games, a scavenger hunt, kick ball, a field trip to the Houston Livestock Show, a Christmas party, an Easter egg hunt, the FFA banquet, and an end-of-the-year party. This time is considered an opportunity for special friendships to form and positive role modeling to occur.

Many teachers and parents have commented on the positive changes in the students in class and at home. There has been a noticeable positive change in the behaviors and self-esteem of many of the children. The students, high school and elementary alike, are able to express their feelings and record activities they participate in through required weekly journals. The students look forward to this special time and express that they feel loved and special. This program has helped teach the students responsibility and commitment. PALS has been honored with the award, "Through the Eyes of Children," given by the CISD school board.

The first year of the program ('92-'93 school year), was financially sponsored by the National FFA Organization through a one-year grant which helped establish and organize the program. In order to continue this special program, corporate financial support is needed. One of our goals for the '93-'94 school year is to include the community in this special program. We will need to acquire approximately $2,500 in donations to cover costs for the '93-'94 school year for items such as transportation costs, supplies, snacks and field trips.

We would appreciate any support Mitchell Energy or the Mitchell Corporation could extend. If a presentation is needed, we would be happy to come and speak with you. Thank you for considering our special program and the benefits it provides our community.

Sincerely,

Emily Shine

OVERVIEW

PALS is a mentoring program which matches high school agriculture students with elementary students to help them get excited about school, explore their interests in plants and animals, and develop their personal skills. Mentoring activities will center around building trust and developing a positive self-esteem through sharing and working together in a one-to-one relationship at least once a week. The mentoring role is a major commitment on the part of the students who are selected because they will be helping to build the human resource potential of a young child as well as that of themselves. The mentors will receive training from high school and elementary counselors and agriculture teachers when they are not working with elementary students.

TRAINING OBJECTIVES

The participants will:

1. Understand the skills necessary in a mentoring relationship and work to acquire these skills.
2. Understand the issues of diversity within themselves, their PALS and their communities.
3. Comprehend the concept of self-identity and gain the skills necessary for developing positive self-esteem. In addition, they will understand the strengths and weaknesses of a mentoring relationship.

SECTION 1: THE MENTORING RELATIONSHIP

Objective:

Participants will understand the communication and problem-solving skills necessary for developing a mentoring relationship and work to acquire these skills.

COMMUNICATION SKILLS:

- 1.1 Listening Agree/Disagree
- 1.2 Eight Communication Jammers
- 1.3 Listening Poem
- 1.4 Talking Sticks

PROBLEM-SOLVING SKILLS:

- 1.5 Feeling Words Brainstorm
- 1.6 Feelings Role-play
- 1.7 "I" Messages

Total Time: 3 hours, 30 minutes

Materials Needed:

- Handouts 1 - 5
- Transparencies 1 - 2
- Reading 1
- Flip Chart
- Markers
- Toothpicks
- Pens or Pencils for each participant
- Post-It™ Notes
- Poster Board

SECTION 1: THE MENTORING RELATIONSHIP

Activity 1.1

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Help participants understand some of the stereotypes related to listening and comprehend their own values and attitudes.

NOTE: This activity can be done at the beginning and the end of this section to assess changes in opinions.

Time: 30 minutes

Materials: Agree, Disagree, Unsure Signs
Masking Tape

Group Size: Whole Group

Activity: Make three signs by writing in bold letters, AGREE, DISAGREE, UNSURE. Use only one word per sign. Tape these signs to the wall about 6 feet off the ground and several feet apart. Give each participant a copy of HO #1. Explain to the whole group the importance of individuality in this exercise. They will be asked to form opinions when read a question and the opinion should be their own, even if it disagrees with their neighbors or friends. Stress that this is not an exercise of right or wrong, merely one to help them better understand their attitudes when presented with a statement. Read each statement on HO #1. After each statement is read, have the participants stand under the sign with their answer to that statement. After each statement is read and opinions are given, ask the following questions:

- Why do you think this is so?
- Why do you disagree with this statement?
- Would anyone like to change their answer?
- Why or why not?

Outcome: Comprehend that opinions impact our decisions and we must learn how to make our own decisions.

Activity 1.1

Handout #1

Listening Activity

Agree/Disagree/Unsure

Read each statement below. Decide whether you agree, disagree or are unsure about each statement.

1. When a person is upset, it is not their fault. (The best thing to do is let them calm down before you try to help them.)
2. People with high IQs are less capable than those with lower IQs. (Smarter is not necessarily a bad thing.)
3. When a person is talking, the speaker is totally responsible for making sure we understand the message.
4. Talking makes a person feel better. It is a good thing to talk when you are upset.
5. It is possible to be a good listener and not be a good speaker. (A good listener is not necessarily a good speaker.)
6. Listening and hearing are two different things. (Listening is a skill, hearing is a sense.)
7. It is better to be a good listener than a good speaker. (It is up to you to decide.)
8. It is better to be a good speaker than a good listener. (It is up to you to decide.)
9. It is better to be a good listener than a good speaker. (It is up to you to decide.)
10. It is better to be a good speaker than a good listener. (It is up to you to decide.)

Answer groups can give their answers.

"How to Conquer Communication Jammers" Poster

Group Size: Whole Group, Small Group

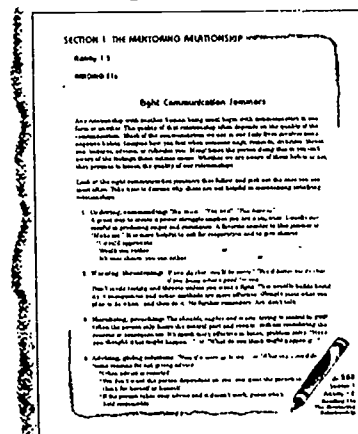

Activity: Distribute RD #1 a-b. Tell mentors they will develop quality communication skills which will make them better mentors for their pals. In the whole group, have students take turns reading aloud each of the communication jammers. Then, have students break into small groups of about 4-5. Ask the small groups to develop alternative responses to the eight communication jammers. Have each group write one response per communication jammer on a Post-It™ note. When they've completed the list, reassemble the whole group and have one person from each small group report their responses. After they have reported, have each group place their responses on a poster board titled, "How to Conquer Communication Jammers." Leave this poster up so the mentors can refer to it throughout the year.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of effective communication skills.

Flip Chart Paper

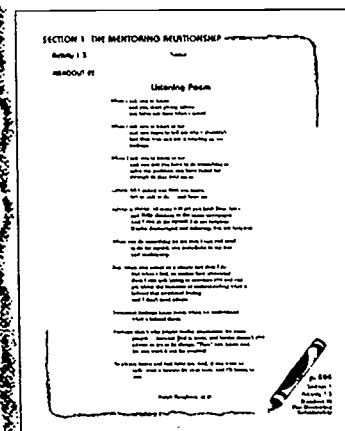

Group Size: Whole Group

Activity: Bring the group into an informal circle. The less formal the setting, the better the sharing and communication will be. Distribute HO #2 and let each participant read the poem silently. Allow ample time for each person to read the poem then select someone and ask them to read the poem aloud. As the poem is being read, ask each person to choose the one or two words, phrases or ideas that are most meaningful to them. Go around the circle and ask each person to state their favorite phrase or idea and express why it's their favorite. Even if more than one person gives the same idea, it is important that everyone has an opportunity to state their choices. Their reasons for choosing the phrase may be different from another's. Each person needs an opportunity to respond instead of saying, "Same as he/she said." As each idea is expressed, write it in one- or two-word phrases on the flip chart. Even if an idea has already been expressed, write it down. Listen carefully for "feeling words" such as sad, happy, embarrassed, etc. When everyone has had an opportunity to share their thoughts, compare the list with the participants, then discuss the similarities and differences and how the poem made each person feel.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of listening.

Toothpicks
Paper and pencil for pairs

Group Size: Whole Group, Pairs

Activity: Select a volunteer to assist you in demonstrating this activity. Ask the volunteer to describe something such as directions to their home or how their house was constructed. Watch their body language carefully. Observe how the others in the group listen and their eye contact. Report what you saw to the group—the body language used in the description, what the group was doing, etc.

Divide the group into pairs by counting off 1, 2, or A, B, or just find a partner, etc. Give one of the partners in each pair seven toothpicks. Ask the pairs to sit back-to-back on the floor. Give partner A one minute to draw a design using seven lines the length of toothpicks on a piece of paper. The design could be anything. Partner B must not be able to see the design and partner A cannot tell partner B what the design is. Ask partner A to describe this design to partner B. Their assignment is to recreate the design using the toothpicks. Partner A can only use verbal communication and may not physically help or look at partner B. Allow two minutes for this part of the activity, then have them switch roles. Partner B will now draw a design using seven lines and partner A will try to recreate it. After both partners have tried, discuss the difficulty of this activity and why it is so hard. Show TP #1 and discuss how we tend to communicate and how important it is that we are aware, not just of what we say, but how we say it and the impression it leaves on others.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of non-verbal communication and the impact it has on others.

Group

Size: Whole Group

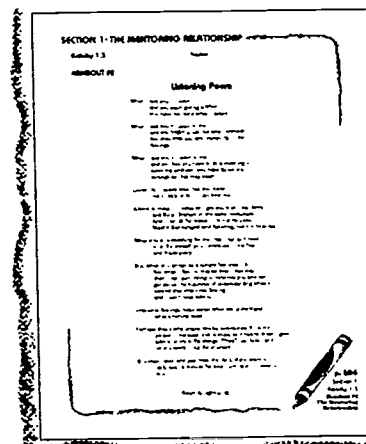

Activity: Using HO #2 (from Activity 1.3) allow each participant time to re-read "The Listening Poem," and brainstorm the feeling words expressed in each line. Write these words on the flip chart so everyone in the room can see them. When this is completed, ask the participants to discuss the overall feeling expressed in each paragraph, e.g., happy, sad, frustrated, alone, etc. Then ask some of the following questions:

- Was it easy to figure out the feelings expressed?
- Were you surprised at some of the "feeling" words?
- What other words can you think of that express your feelings about this poem that haven't already been expressed?
- How will you be able to use this exercise in your mentoring relationship?

On the flip chart, have the mentors list how this is going to help them become better mentors. Discuss.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of identifying feelings in their mentoring relationships and how this is going to help them be better mentors.

Purpose: Assist mentors in identifying feelings and emotions expressed in verbal communications.

Time: 30 minutes

Materials: Handout #3a–b, pages 205-206

Group Size: Whole Group

Activity: Take the list of feeling words generated from Activity 1.5 and tape the flip chart paper to the wall so everyone can see it. Review the list of feeling words. Make sure the following words or similar feelings are included on the list. If they are not, add them.

- frustration
- elation
- happiness
- hurt
- anger
- pride
- boredom
- encouragement
- jealousy
- confusion

Distribute HOs #3a–b to each participant. Ask for volunteers to read and role-play the statements on the handout. At the conclusion of each statement, ask participants to identify what they felt in listening to the statement and discuss why. Then have them identify what the person making this statement might have felt and discuss why. Be sure to discuss the similarities and/or differences in the answers of the participant and the person making the statement. Ask the participants why they think or feel it is important to understand and be aware of, not just their feelings, but someone else's feelings especially when serving as a mentor. Have them share their responses.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of effective communications.

Activity: Distribute HO #4 and have participants volunteer to read each section aloud. Have mentors state why it is important to use “I” messages instead of “You” messages. Display TP #2 and review the guidelines and rules for “I” messages, letting participants know these guidelines can be used as blueprints for creating appropriate “I” message responses. Distribute HO #5 and, in small groups, have the participants read the “You” messages. By using the guidelines, instruct them to develop appropriate “I” message responses. Once the activity is completed, have a representative from each group be the reporter. Go around the room and have the reporter from each group respond to one statement aloud. Do this until you have one “I” response for each of the eight statements. Write the responses on the flip chart, then discuss. Ask if the response followed the guidelines. Why or why not? Did anyone else have a different response within that group or other groups? Why? Continue this process until all statements have been reviewed. Ask why this is important to the mentoring relationship.

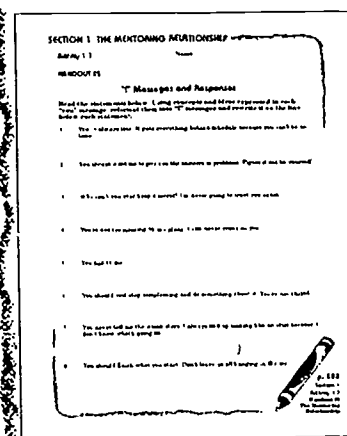

NOTE: This is a new process for most people and requires practice and some adjustment.

Outcome: Comprehend the importance of “I” messages especially in developing positive mentoring relationships.

- 2.1 Discussion on Prejudice
- 2.2 Definitions of Diversity
- 2.3 Evaluate Stereotyping
- 2.4 Cultural Exchange Questionnaire
- 2.5 Cultural Bag

Total Time: 2 hours, 30 minutes

Activity: Brainstorm with the whole group about what they think it means to be prejudice. Write these thoughts on the chalkboard. Distribute HO #6, one piece of flip chart paper per participant, and markers. Ask each student to read the statements presented on the handout and draw a representation of their experience in response to each statement. If they believe they haven't had an experience that relates to a specific statement, they should draw a picture showing how they think they would feel in that situation. After about 15-20 minutes, reassemble the group and have them discuss their drawings. What similarities emerged and why? What feelings seem to be common among all? What are the differences that emerged and why? How would they feel if their pal was of a different ethnic group, gender, socioeconomic status, etc.?

Outcome: Become aware of our own prejudices and how they impact others.

Size: Small Group

Activity: Divide the students into groups of five. Explain that they will work together to create a complete picture using flip chart paper and markers. Each group will select a folded piece of paper from a container, on each paper one of the following words will be written: secretary, doctor, firefighter, Mexican, judge, teacher, American Indian. Tell the groups not to look at their paper until all groups have drawn. Once all groups are ready, have them look at their paper and begin to draw their figure. Give the groups about 10 minutes to complete their drawings. When they've finished, have them tape their drawings to the wall and discuss why they drew the pictures the way they did. Was there a reason why they chose male vs. female, a certain ethnic group, or certain racial characteristics? Could the same picture be drawn in a different way? If so, how? Where did the idea to draw it this way originate? Challenge the group to find a representation, whether in a magazine or on TV, that doesn't fit the image they created. Example, a female vs. a male firefighter. What if their pal is of another gender or ethnic group?

Outcome: Become aware of how we stereotype people so that the students will not stereotype their pals.

Activity: Distribute HO #7a-b to each participant. Tell the participants the information gathered is for their own use. No one needs to answer any question with which s/he doesn't feel comfortable. All the information is anonymous. The overall purpose is to compile a collage of the similarities and differences regarding how they live their lives. Ask each participant to complete the questionnaire individually. After this is completed, each questionnaire is torn into five sections: media, money, religion, time and home life.

Divide the students into five groups. Each group will be responsible for compiling and reporting the information in their assigned areas. They will report on the differences, similarities and the surprises. Allow ample time for discussion after each report.

Outcome: Create better understanding of the mentor group as a whole.

When they have completed this portion of the activity, have the participants divide into groups of four or five, then have each individual share the contents of their bag in their group. Once everyone has shared, reassemble the whole group and have them answer the following questions: What did they find...interesting? ...different? ...the same? ...surprising?

This activity will help the mentors understand themselves better as well as others. How might this affect their mentoring relationship with their pal?

NOTE: As the instructor, observe participants' reactions through the activity. Some may struggle to find themselves through someone else's images. They usually succeed by capturing the emotion of a picture that correlates with the emotion of an event in their life. This activity can become very emotional for some students. Each participant should be encouraged to share the contents of their bag but should also feel safe to decline.

Outcome: Becoming aware of and accepting our differences as well as our similarities is primary to developing cultural competency. While all people share common basic needs, there are many ways in which people of different cultures go about meeting those needs. These differences are part of what makes each one of us unique and special.

Activity: Tell participants they are going to display their artistic talents. There may be some complaints about "I can't draw," or "I don't know how," but they will participate. Display TP #6 and indicate that even very simple drawings can convey their personalities. Express to participants the idea is to identify themselves as individuals to see how they perceive themselves. Give each student a piece of flip chart paper and distribute markers for all to use. In the center of the paper, they will draw a portrait of themselves. On the upper right corner, they will trace their right hand. On the lower left corner, have them draw a large heart. Ask each participant to think of five things they do well. It could be a physical or mental activity. Encourage them to think of things they may not have considered such as taking care of younger siblings, making people laugh or even whistling. Have them write these five things on the fingers of the hand in the upper right corner. Now ask each participant what kind of mentor they would like to be and have them list five qualities they think are important for this role in the heart.

After they have completed their drawings, display them around the room. Give participants a few minutes to view all the portraits. Then ask them to come back together and have those who would like to share their thoughts and feelings do so. Also, ask how this is going to make them better mentors.

Outcome: Help to see themselves as better mentors.

SECTION 3: CONTEMPORARY ISSUES IN MENTORING

Activity 3.5

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Help participants explore alternatives and learn the skills necessary to facilitate exploring alternatives with their pals.

Time: 30 minutes

Materials: Handout #13, page 218
Handout #14, page 219
Pens or pencils for participants
Seven pieces of paper

Small Group

Activity: Open this activity by asking the questions, “When would it be necessary for someone or yourself to explore alternatives?” What would you do if your mentee came to you with a problem and wanted you to help?” Give each participant a copy of HC #13. Review each section carefully and answer any questions that may arise. Express the importance of not giving advice, but rather allowing others to develop solutions with a mentor’s guidance. Divide the group into five smaller groups. Place five sheets of paper in a container and include the following statements on the sheets.

- My best friend wants me to get drunk this weekend.
- My boyfriend/girlfriend thinks we're ready to have sex.
- My mom and dad are getting a divorce.
- The school bully says I'll be beaten to a pulp if I don't help cheat on a test.
- My mom wants us to move to a new town but I like it here with my friends.

Using the Exploring Alternatives Model, let each group complete HO #13. Let each small group share their alternatives with the whole group. There will be lively discussion. Be careful to avoid giving advice or allowing others to give advice. Each group should come to their own conclusions. If a group appears stuck, share HO #14, Questions and Suggestions. Give each participant a copy of HO #14 and carefully review each section.

Outcome: Assist participants in exploring alternatives and solving problems with their pals.

Activity 3.6

INSTRUCTOR'S NOTES

Purpose: Help participants understand different types of issues that may arise during their mentoring relationship and how to cope with those issues.

Time: 45 minutes

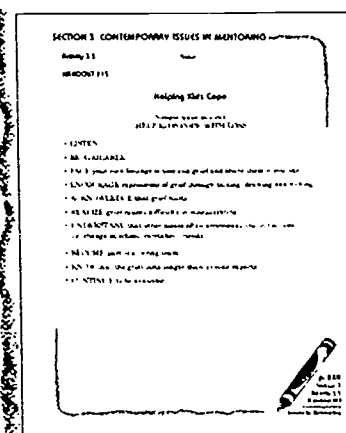

Materials: Handout #15, page 220
Reading #3a-e, pages 232-236

Group Size: Whole Group

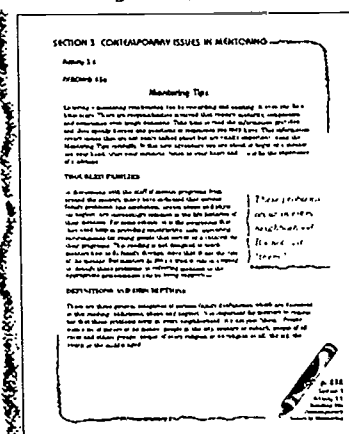

Activity: Distribute HO #15 and RD #3a-e. Have participants take turns reading. After each section, stop and discuss each issue. Together make a list of rules that the mentors will abide by.

Outcome: Mentors will understand when they must report something to the teacher or counselor.

HANDOUT #1

Listening Activity Agree/Disagree/Unsure

Read each statement below. Decide whether you agree, disagree or are unsure about each statement.

1. Whenever someone comes to you with a problem, the best thing to do is tell them what you would do in that situation.
2. People with higher IQ's are less guillible than those with lower IQ's. (Someone who is easily manipulated is not very intelligent.)
3. When a person is talking, the speaker is totally responsible for making sure you understand the conversation.
4. Telling someone, "Don't worry, it'll all work out," is a good thing to say whenever presented with another person's situation.
5. We should carefully analyze and try to diagnose the hidden meanings behind conversations, explaining to the person that you understand their problem.
6. Listening and hearing are basically the same thing.
7. In communication, it's best to avoid the "you shoulds" and "you wills."
8. Whenever someone comes to me with a problem, it's up to me to point out the facts and make sure the solutions are logical.
9. Whenever a friend comes to me with a problem, once I know about it, it becomes my problem too.
10. Some people are just born listeners.

HANDOUT #2

Listening Poem

When I ask you to listen and you start giving advice, you have not done what I asked.

When I ask you to listen to me and you begin to tell me why I shouldn't feel that way, you are trampling on my feelings.

When I ask you to listen to me and you feel you have to do something to solve my problem, you have failed me, strange as that may seem.

Listen! All I asked was that you listen, not to talk or do — just hear me.

Advice is cheap: 10 cents will get you both Dear Abby and Billy Graham in the same newspaper.
And I can do for myself. I'm not helpless.
Maybe discouraged and faltering, but not helpless.

When you do something for me that I can and need to do for myself, you contribute to my fear and inadequacy.

But, when you accept as a simple fact that I do feel what I feel, no matter how irrational, then I can quit trying to convince you and can get about the business of understanding what's behind this irrational feeling and I don't need advice.

Irrational feelings make sense when we understand what's behind them.

Perhaps that's why prayer works, sometimes, for some people — because God is mute, and he/she doesn't give advice or try to fix things. "They" just listen and let you work it out for yourself.

So please listen and just hear me. And, if you want to talk, wait a minute for your turn, and I'll listen to you.

Feelings Role-play

Read each statement. Write down the feelings you have whenever you hear the words spoken. On the second line, write down the feeling being expressed by the other person. These feelings may be the same or very different. Example: "Sometimes when I'm all by myself, I start to cry. I feel so lonely sometimes." The person saying these words may be feeling depression. You, on the other hand, may feel frustration when hearing these words because you don't know how to help.

1. "All I ever do is work. I come home from school and there's always a list of things that have to be done. Doesn't anybody think I like to have a good time, too?"

HANDOUT #4

"I" Messages

What are "I" messages and what good are they?

"I" messages show concern in a calm and respectful way. Most of us are familiar with using you messages. "I" messages focus the communication on your feelings and expectations rather than those of the other person. Whenever we focus the attention on the other person's feelings and expectations, whether by accident or on purpose, often the communication takes on a blaming and accusatory tone. Simply put, "I" messages are statements, beginning with "I," that tell how you feel about a certain situation. It sounds easy, but it takes a lot of practice.

What's the difference between "I" and "you" messages?

The best way to show this is by examples. Take a look at the examples below. The "you" messages are first, followed by the appropriate "I" messages.

- 1a. "You promised you'd never tell anyone. I knew I shouldn't have told you. You can't ever keep a secret!"
- 1b. "I feel hurt when you tell something I told you in secret because I didn't want anyone else to know."
- 2a. "You're never organized or dependable. You can't be counted on."
- 2b. "I get really upset whenever you back out on something, especially at the last minute because it leaves me stuck holding the bag."

When should an "I" message be used?

"I" messages are the most appropriate way to express how you feel whenever a conflict arises. They can express what the conflict is to the other person(s) and how this conflict affected or is affecting you. Think about the last time you were in an argument. Did you use "I" or "you" messages? Everyone has had "you" messages pitched at them. Think about how they make you feel, probably not very good.

"I" messages take practice and patience but they DO WORK.

"I" Messages and Responses

Read the statements below. Using concepts and ideas expressed in each "you" message, reformat them into "I" messages and rewrite it on the line below each statement.

1. You're always late. It puts everything behind schedule because you can't be on time.

2. You always want me to give you the answers to problems. Figure it out for yourself.

3. Why can't you ever keep a secret? I'm never going to trust you again.

4. You're always messing up my plans. I can never count on you.

5. You lied to me.

6. You should just stop complaining and do something about it. You're not stupid.

7. You never tell me the whole story. I always end up looking like an idiot because I don't know what's going on.

8. You should finish what you start. Don't leave us all hanging in the air.

Discussion on Prejudice

What comes to mind when you think of the word prejudice? What is prejudice? Is it about race? Is it about religion? Is it about money? The answer is yes to all of these. Prejudice goes far beyond color. It can involve things as diverse as the part of the country from where someone comes and, yes, it may involve color and gender as well. Have you ever been in another part of the country and someone commented about the way you spoke? Did they make fun of you? If so, that's prejudice. Prejudice is something we all learn. Many times we're not even aware of its existence in our lives or the fact that we may be prejudice ourselves in one way or another. Look at the questions and statements below. Place yourself in that situation and draw a representation of the feelings you have when placed in that situation or think you would feel if you ever faced it.

1. Have you ever felt different than other people?
2. Were you ever treated differently than other people?
3. Sometimes I wish I could be invisible.
4. I've had people laugh at me for something I can't control. I laughed also, but inside it really hurt me.
5. Do you ever feel dumb?
6. Have you ever been in a situation when you were afraid because you felt you didn't belong?
7. Boy, I've never been so glad to see someone I knew.
8. I wish they'd just give me a chance.

Mentoring: What's it all about?

Mentoring Functions

1. Listening

The most important function of the mentor may be to listen. Many young people do not have anyone at home who is willing and able to listen to what they have to say. People are often able to sort out their problems and arrive at their own solutions just by having someone with whom to "talk out" the situation.

2. Coaching

Coaches give praise for a job well done, encouragement when the going gets tough, and constructive criticism when changes need to be made. It's always easier to deal with the negatives when you know there are some positives.

3. Educating

A mentor can also be a tutor. Sometimes it may seem easier to do for a young person, but the young person will benefit more if they do for themselves with a little guidance from a mentor. One way to give a young person control is to teach them the skills to take care of themselves.

4. Role Modeling

Mentors can help their mentees develop values, standards and goals by allowing themselves to be seen as "real people" and by sharing personal beliefs and values. Mentors can also introduce their mentees to others whom they hold in high regard.

Getting a Handle on Stress

1. Work off stress – If you are angry or upset, try to blow off steam physically by activities such as running or sports. Even taking a walk can help.
2. Talk out your worries – It helps to share worries with someone you trust and respect. This may be a friend, family member, teacher or counselor. Sometimes another person can help you see a new side to your problem and thus, a new solution.
3. Learn to accept what you cannot change – If the problem is beyond your control at this time, try your best to accept it until you can change it. It beats spinning your wheels and getting nowhere.
4. Get enough sleep and rest – Lack of sleep can lessen your ability to deal with stress by making you more irritable.
5. Balance work and recreation – All work and no play can make Jack or Jill a nervous wreck! Schedule time for recreation to relax your mind.
6. Do something for others – Sometimes when you are distressed, you concentrate too much on yourself and your situation. When this happens, it is often wise to do something for someone else and get your mind off yourself. There is an extra bonus in this technique: it helps you make friends.
7. Take one thing at a time – Many times we set ourselves up for failure by trying to do too many things at the same time. It is defeating to tackle all your tasks at once. Instead, set some tasks aside and work on the most urgent ones.
8. Give in once in a while – If you find the source of your stress is other people, try giving in instead of fighting and insisting you are always right. You may find that others will begin to give in, too.
9. Know your abilities and your limitations – This is not easy. It takes a lot of self-study. Many times stress is caused by asking yourself to do something you are not able to do. Before agreeing to do something you do not have to do, ask yourself if it is within your ability to accomplish.
10. Organize yourself and your time – Learn ways to help yourself keep up with what you have to do. Plan how you will accomplish the necessary work. Organization can help you avoid wasting time and energy.
11. Avoid being a perfectionist – No one person can be perfect at everything. Do your BEST, but don't be afraid of MAKING A MISTAKE. Everyone makes mistakes, and many times we learn by our mistakes.

Exploring Alternatives

When you are helping someone explore alternative ways of handling a problem, it's always helpful to follow a pattern similar to the one below:

- BRAINSTORM as many ways of handling the situation as possible;
- ASSIST in evaluating the pros and cons (NOT ADVISING);
- CHOOSE the alternative he/she thinks is best;
- COMMITMENT should be made by the person will put the plan into action; and,
- FOLLOW-UP and evaluate the plan.

1. What is the problem?
2. What are the alternatives? (Brainstorm as many as possible)
3. What are the consequences of each alternative?
4. Choose one alternative and when you plan to begin using it.
5. Set a time for evaluation.

REMEMBER: When you help someone in choosing a solution, try not to give advice.

- Advice takes the responsibility away from the person with the problem.
- Advising won't be a learning process to help with future problems.
- The person may not want to do what you say.
- If the advice fails, you are held responsible.

Questions and Suggestions to Generate Alternatives

To help a person explore alternatives, especially when the person seems stuck, the following series of questions and statements are usually helpful.

1. Summarize the situation and what has been tried.
2. Ask:
 - "What else have you tried?"
 - "What have you thought about trying?"
 - "What do you think might work?"
3. If the person cannot generate plausible alternatives, you can comment:
 - "Have you considered _____?"
 - "I wonder what would happen if _____?"
 - "What do you think would happen if _____?"

Sometimes it's appropriate to offer suggestions. Suggestions should:

- offer choice
- be tentative
- leave responsibility for trying or not trying with the person you're helping

Suggestions should be offered as another alternative for the person to consider. Don't put the person down for not accepting your suggestions.

Eight Communication Jammers

Any relationship with another human being must begin with communication in one form or another. The quality of that relationship often depends on the quality of the communication. Much of the communication we use in our daily lives involves some negative habits. Imagine how you feel when someone nags, reminds, criticizes, threatens, lectures, advises, or ridicules you. Many times the person doing this to you isn't aware of the feelings these actions cause. Whether we are aware of these habits or not, they promise to lessen the quality of our relationships.

Look at the eight communication jammers that follow and pick out the ones you use most often. Take time to discuss why these are not helpful in maintaining satisfying relationships.

1. Ordering, commanding: "You must," "You will," "You have to".

A great way to create a power struggle-implies you are a superior. Usually successful in producing anger and resistance. A favorite counter to this jammer is "Make me." It is more helpful to ask for cooperation and to give choices:

"I would appreciate _____."

"Would you rather _____ or _____?"

"It's your choice; you can either _____ or _____."

2. Warning, threatening: "If you do that, you'll be sorry." "You'd better not do that if you know what's good for you."

Don't invite testing and threats unless you want a fight. This usually builds hostility. Consequences and action methods are more effective. (Simply state what you plan to do when- and then do it. No further reminders. Act-don't talk.)

3. Moralizing, preaching: The shoulds, oughts and musts-trying to control by guilt. Often the person only hears the control part and resists, without considering the reasons or consequences. It's much more effective to listen, problem-solve: "Have you thought what might happen...?" or "What do you think might happen if...?"

4. Advising, giving solutions: "Now if it were up to me..." or "What you should do..."

Some reasons for not giving advice:

*Often advice is resisted

*You don't want the person dependent on you; you want the person to think for herself or himself.

*If the person takes your advice and it doesn't work, guess who's held responsible.

- 5. Lecturing, giving logical arguments: Trying to prove your point with "the facts":
"You're wrong here," and "Yes, but..."

Often people are well aware of the facts and resent being told them again and again. Trying to persuade with facts is usually not effective. Helping the person explore the goals, alternatives, and consequences of proposed action gives you much more influence in guiding the person.

- 6. Judging, ridiculing, blaming, name-calling, sarcasm, shaming-the put downs:
"How stupid." "You're just lazy." "It's all your fault." "Okay, big shot." "You're a spoiled brat." "You're not thinking clearly." "That's an immature point of view."

This is designed to motivate by making people feel inadequate and inferior. It usually succeeds only in making people defensive as they try to protect their self-image. The common responses are either to return criticism or seal feelings off and shut down communication and cooperation. It is important to separate the behavior you disagree with from the person's character and worth. It's harder to be specific about what you want without dragging the person's dignity through the mud, but far more effective.

- 7. Playing psychologist, analyzing and diagnosing: "The problem with you is..." or "You're just jealous."

Telling people what their motives are and that you have them figured out is embarrassing, frustrating, and threatening. This is another way to shut off communication and guarantee the person won't share problems with you. If your interpretation is wrong, the person will most likely become angry.

- 8. Consoling: The consoling person tries to keep from getting involved by treating the other person's feelings lightly:

"It's not really that bad."

"You'll feel better in the morning."

"Don't worry, it'll all work out."

Listening and helping the person explore alternative solutions is more helpful. Sometimes people complain just to let off steam. They are not looking to solve a problem. When you offer a solution, you can complicate the issue and make them angry by making the issue larger than it might really be.

Diversity Dialogue

What do all those terms mean?

Before anyone can begin to understand people, they must first understand some basic concepts about themselves. Mainly that we're all part of a culture of some sort, we all belong to a race and we all have some kind of ethnic heritage. Let's do a mini exercise. What is the first thought that comes to your mind when you hear the word...culture? How about race? Racism? Do you belong to a culture? What kind is it and how does it affect what you do everyday? Let's look at some definitions and then ask these same questions again.

1. What is culture?

A society's culture consists of whatever it is one has to know or believe in order to operate in a manner acceptable to its members. Culture may also be defined as the learned, shared and transmitted social activities of a group, the human-made part of the environment that satisfies all basic needs for survival and adaptation to the environment. In short, culture is made up of the parts of our lives that we LEARN, which cause us to act and react in certain ways. It can include the way we dress, greet people, eat and get angry among many other factors.

2. What is meant by "race?"

Race is a concept used by some scientists to divide humankind into categories based on physical characteristics of size and shape of the head, eyes, ears, lips and nose, and the color of skin and eyes. Following the eighteenth-century trend among European scientists to classify all living things, a scientist named J.F. Blumenback first identified five racial types that have lasted: Negroid, Caucasoid, Mongoloid, Malayan and American Indian.

3. What is "racism?"

Racism is the belief that one's own race is superior to another. This belief is based on the erroneous assumption that physical attributes of a racial group determine their social behavior as well as their psychological and intellectual characteristics. In short, racism is the belief that one race is better than another. This belief is based on the WRONG idea that all people of one race act and react the same way, an inferior way, and therefore should be treated poorly.

4. What is ethnicity?

Ethnicity is not the same as race or culture, but may contain parts of each. An ethnic group is defined as a group of people within a larger society that is socially distinguished or set apart by others and/or by itself, based on race and cultural characteristics such as religion, language and traditions. Confusing?

Diversity Dialogue continued

Let's look a little bit more at ethnicity to better understand it. All Americans are members of an ethnic group. Some people, however, relate to their ethnic group more than others. Being close to one's heritage is extremely important to some people and not so important to others.

Here's a story that may help to better understand the ideas of culture, race and ethnicity.

Katrina was the only child of two German teachers. When she was only five years old, Katrina moved to China along with her parents. Her parents organized churches and schools in the rural back country. Katrina grew and developed alongside her Chinese friends. She grew up learning the ways of the country people that became her parent's neighbors. Although she spoke German, her first language was Chinese. She learned to recognize the symbols and signs of the life around her. The people accepted her truly as one of them.

Based on this story, can you decide Katrina's race, ethnicity and culture?

Katrina's race is Caucasoid. Europeans are of the Caucasoid race. What is your race?

Her ethnicity is German. This is her heritage, even though she may not be particularly close to it. What is your ethnicity?

Finally, her culture is Chinese. The Chinese set of rules and way of life are the standards by which she operates and learns. What is your culture?

Do you think it's ever possible for someone's culture to change?

Mentoring Tips

Entering a mentoring relationship can be rewarding and exciting. It even can be a little scary. There are responsibilities involved that require maturity, compassion and sometimes even tough decisions. Take time to read the information provided and then openly discuss any questions or comments you may have. This information covers issues that are not easily talked about but are vitally important. Read the Mentoring Tips carefully. In this new adventure you are about to begin as a mentor, use your head, trust your instincts, listen to your heart and it will be the experience of a lifetime.

TROUBLED FAMILIES

In discussions with the staff of mentor programs from around the country, many have indicated that serious family problems, like alcoholism, sexual abuse and physical neglect, are increasingly common in the life histories of their mentees. For some schools, it is the awareness that they need help in providing constructive, safe, nurturing environments for young people that serves as a catalyst for their programs. This reading is not designed to teach mentors how to do family therapy, since that is not the role of the mentor. But mentors do play a crucial role in helping to identify these problems, in referring mentees to the appropriate professionals and by being supportive.

*These problems
neighborhood.
It's not just
"them."*

DEFINITIONS AND DESCRIPTIONS

There are three general categories of serious family dysfunction which are discussed in this reading: addictions, abuse and neglect. It is important for mentors to remember that these problems occur in every neighborhood. It's not just "them." People with a lot of money or no money; people in the city, country or suburb; people of all races and ethnic groups; people of every religion or no religion at all; the old, the young or the middle aged.

ADDICTIONS

A lot of times we think of alcohol and drug abuse with young people. Sometimes we have to stop and remember that other family and community members can have serious problems associated with substance abuse that can affect the whole family, including the mentee or even the mentor. When a parent has a serious addiction, children often develop dysfunctional reactions to their parent's problem. Some may become what is often referred to as "parentified children," young people that often find themselves making excuses for their parent's abusive behavior. In this way, children of abusers often become "overly" responsible.

For instance, they may regularly have to make excuses for a parent not showing up for work or they may do unusual amounts of housekeeping or baby-sitting. In addition, they may feel in some way responsible for their parent's addiction. This attitude only serves to encourage this "people pleasing" behavior and accelerates the downward spiral.

Be alert to:

- anger
- lack of trust
- injuries
- running away
- depression
- abuse

There are three kinds of abuse: physical, sexual and emotional. Each state has its own legal definition of physical and sexual abuse. Find out about your state's statutes and reporting requirements. If you don't receive this information during your training, ask for it.

PHYSICAL ABUSE

For this reading, the definition of physical abuse includes any form of contact which results in serious injury or leaves long-lasting marks, bruises or scars. Physical abuse ranges from severe pinching, hard slaps, hitting with a closed fist or some other object, to burning or in any way mutilating any part of the body. Internal injuries may also be signs of abuse.

SEXUAL ABUSE

Usually when people talk about sexual abuse, it can include incest (sexual abuse within a family) or non-familial sexual abuse. Incest can be one of the most difficult problems to deal with and to overcome. It can become the biggest family secret. Incest can range from inappropriate touching or kissing to sexual intercourse. While touching and kissing can be good and an expression of appropriate love, children tend to know intuitively the difference between good touching and bad touching.

EMOTIONAL ABUSE

Emotional abuse is hard to define but includes such things as withholding love or making it conditional, severe and consistent put-downs and shaming a child by saying things which make a child feel bad or worthless. It's probably the hardest to detect but has a long-lasting impact on the self-esteem of a child.

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS

Identifying abusive situations is a difficult task, even for trained professionals. But, as a mentor, you may be in a unique position to notice when something feels or looks wrong. Some systems are associated with specific kinds of abuse:

Physical Abuse

This is perhaps the easiest to detect. It may be suspected if the child has frequent injuries whose explanations don't seem plausible. Physically abused children are often unusually fearful of or nervous around the abusive parent.

Sexual Abuse

Sexually abused victims often have an unusual, and extreme dislike for being touched. On the other hand, some sexually abused children try to please adults by being physically affectionate in ways which have sexual overtones. If you feel that the way your mentee shows affection is inappropriate for his/her age, and if it feels sexual, trust your intuitions and talk to your program advisor. If a child shows high levels of anxiety or fear at being left alone with a particular member of the family, this also can be an indication of sexual abuse.

Emotional Abuse

Emotionally abused children may tend to put themselves down or criticize themselves a lot. Sometimes parents who are emotionally abusive have very negative nicknames for their children.

Other signs and symptoms to watch for, regardless of the specific kind of abuse, include persistent and unexplained depression or withdrawal, excessive anger or emotions, self-mutilation, consistent running away, inability to trust, difficulty in developing healthy long-term relationships, and suicidal/homicidal thoughts. It is important to keep in mind, however, that many, if not most, adolescents do some of these things some of the time.

WHAT SHOULD YOU DO??

If you suspect abuse, the first thing to do is contact your program advisor.

You may feel as if you are breaching your mentee's trust or making a "mountain out of a molehill," but your willingness to take the risk to discuss your observations comes from your concern for your mentee and is ALWAYS the right thing to do. TRUST YOUR INTUITIONS.

Your program advisor will want to know what you have observed, when, how frequently, what you did or said, your mentee's reaction, etc. From there s/he is in the best position to determine what further steps are indicated and appropriate.

Your program staff will advise you on how to deal with the situation with your mentee. If s/he is not sure that a serious problem exists, s/he may ask that you watch for additional signs and talk to you about what kinds of things you can say to or ask your mentee. If abuse is confirmed, you will have questions about what to say to your mentee, how you should act around them and you should discuss these with your advisor.

*Trust your intuitions and seek help from

S/he may suggest that you be honest about your feelings and reactions with your mentee and encourage your mentee to do the same. In special situations, your advisor may ask that you not discuss this with your mentee. If this is the case, s/he will explain why this is the best course of action.

*Never promise

If your mentee discloses abuse to you, it will of course be a shocking and difficult experience to know how to handle. Try your best to listen and be supportive, and don't be afraid to be honest. Remember, this experience is just as hard or harder for the abused to admit as it is for you to hear.

Don't make assumptions on how your mentee should feel but validate what s/he is feeling whether it is anger, fear, frustration or others. Let the abused know s/he is not alone. It happens in other families as well. Explain to him/her that you MUST disclose this information to the program coordinator so s/he can get appropriate help. And finally, don't talk about your opinions of the perpetrator. Remember, this person could be someone the child loves, even though it is hard to understand how someone could do these things to a loved one.

Once the abuse has been identified and the appropriate referrals made, a mentor often feels unsure about how to continue or deal with his/her relationship with the mentee. In some situations, the most helpful thing to do is to be someone the mentee can be with and do things with, without feeling pressure to talk about or deal with the problems at home. You can be a much needed diversion. You might also offer telephone numbers of hotlines and crisis lines in your area.

Finally, it is important not to normalize the situation. Don't downplay the abuse and pretend it happens to everyone. Just be honest and listen empathetically to what they're saying. While serious family problems are something we would rather not have to face, we have a responsibility as mentors to learn how to support our mentees effectively. Commitment is easy during the good times; it's during the rough times when we're truly tested.

Sometimes the best thing you can do for a mentee is just be there.
